FOR NATIONAL SECURITY—

USAF Auditor General BY BRIG. GEN. T. R. RAMFY, USAF Auditor General

ONE of the responsibilities of the Comptrollers of the Army, Navy and Air Force is that of "internal audit." This is clearly set out in Section IV, Public Law 216, 81st Congress. Under this law, the Comptroller of the Department of Defense is responsible for the establishment and promulgation of policies for the guidance of Comptrollers of the Army, Navy, and Air Force. Therefore, the policy direction of internal audit stems from the Comptroller of the Department of Defense. As a part of the Comptroller's organization of each of the three services, there is an audit organization. In the Air Force, this is designated as the Auditor General. It is intended to discuss herein the functions and organization of the Auditor General.

During World War II, the Air Force was a part of the War Department and had its own organization for the audit of procurement contracts. This function was performed independently, that is, the audit staff did not report to the procurement officers, but was under the direct supervision of Headquarters, Army Air Forces. The audit of the internal activities of the Army Air Force was generally performed by other agencies of the Army.

Subsequent to the organization of the Air Force as a separate Department (September 1947), the Auditor General was established as a part of the Comptroller's staff in Headquarters, United States Air Force, in the unusual position of having both staff and operational functions. The staff functions include technical supervision of all Air Force auditing activities and the operational duties involve the performance of all types of audits within the Zone of Interior.

Great progress has been made toward centralizing the audit function and in developing its independent status. The Auditor General now has the responsibility for performance of all Air Force audits at all installations of the Zone of Interior major air commands. It has not been practicable to include responsibility for performance of audits in the overseas commands. Therefore, these overseas commands have their own audit staffs with technical supervision from the Auditor General.

The Auditor General organization consists of Headquarters in Washington with (Please turn to Page 869)

$14.3 Million for USMC

The House Armed Services Committee this week endorsed expenditure of $4,147,000 for construction at the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., and approved $10,159,600 for Marine Corps facilities at the Kanehoe, Oahu, Hawaii, Naval Air Station.

Simultaneously, Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) revealed plans to begin hearings soon on the widely supported legislation which would give the Marine Corps a personnel strength of 400,000.

Maj. Gen. P. T. Hill, Quartermaster General of the Marine Corps, told the Committee of the need for construction at Quantico, particularly with regard to training in the Platoon Leaders Class.

At the Kanehoe air station, facilities are to be provided for housing and training a Marine regimental combat team. General Hill said there are now no training facilities for Marines in Hawaii.

With regard to the bill to increase the strength of the Marine Corps, Chairman Vinson told General Hill that the Committee will want to know all conditions as far as permanent installations are concerned.

At the Kanehoe installation, the Marine Corps plans to have a Regimental Combat Team of 5,700 enlisted men and 519 officers, while 2,502 enlisted men and 518 officers will be trained at the air station.

Submarine Training

The Navy has opened up initial submarine training for enlisted men in three additional ratings.

Ratings that will be accepted for training, if other qualifications are met, are first, second and third class Radarmen, Commissarymen, and Stewardsmen (Pay Grade E-3).

New Chief Signal Officer

The President, on 5 April, following the 31 March retirement of Maj. Gen. Spencer B. Akin, nominated Brig. Gen. George I. Back, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur's Signal Officer in Tokyo since 1947, to be Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

During World War II, from September 1944 to November 1945, General Back served in the Mediterranean Theater of Operations as Deputy Chief Signal Officer of the Allied Force Headquarters and as Chief Signal Officer of the Mediterranean Theater. Prior to his duty in the Far East, General Back was Chief of the Army Communications Service.

It is interesting to note that General Back becomes Chief Signal Officer from duty as Signal Officer of FECOM and as Chief of the Civil Communications Section of the Supreme Command Allied Powers, the exact dual assignment which General Akin held prior to his becoming Chief Signal Officer on 1 April 1947.

General Back is 57 years of age, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Signal Corps Reserve on 8 Nov. 1917 and received his Regular Army commission as a Signal Corps first lieutenant on 1 July 1920.

To Command MSTS Atlantic

Rear Adm. J. M. Will, who was relieved last month as Commander of the Military Sea Transportation Service, European Command, is now in London where he will establish the office of Commander, MSTS, Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean.

After setting up the new headquarters, he will return to the United States next month to assume command of MSTS, Atlantic, with headquarters at the New York Port of Embarkation.

Senate Group Opens Combat Pay Hearing

Passage of combat pay legislation would show the soldiers in Korea that the Nation is aware of the tremendous sacrifices they are making. General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, told the Senate Armed Services Committee this week.

The Senate group, launching hearings on the measure which would provide $100 monthly combat pay for officers and $50 monthly for enlisted men, retroactive to the outbreak of fighting, heard both Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr., and General Collins' plea for removal of an "inequality" in the military pay system "which has been made more poignant by the fact that others in the Armed Forces are today receiving extra pay for duties which surely are no more hazardous than those of the front-line fighting man."

The history of the combat pay measure is that it was first proposed by the Army shortly after fighting began in Korea, but did not clear the Department of Defense until early this year. It has not been acted upon by the Senate and House Armed Services Committees until this time, because of the higher priority given to the Universal Military Service and Training legislation.

Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall stressed the need for passage of the combat pay bill in his semi-annual report, released late last month. General Marshall said:

"Mindful of the sacrifices made by our fighting men, we are also asking for a combat pay bill for our troops on hazardous assignments in an effort to compensate them in part for the ordeals which they are undergoing."

The hazards met by ground forces in Korea were indicated in General Collins' disclosure that in Korea the Army is bearing 83 per cent of the casualties.

"Added to this," he said, "is the fact that our front-line combat soldiers in Korea have been living fighting under almost incredibly severe conditions of weather, filth, and emotional strain. In addition to the highest casualty rate," he explained, "they must endure sleeping out-of-doors in mud, in cold, often without warm food, dry clothing or bathing facilities."

The Chief of Staff emphasized that the combat pay would go only to actual combat units. He estimated that only about 60 per cent of the Army personnel in Korea would receive this pay.

General Collins told the Committee that during his visits to Korea he learned that one of the greatest preoccupations of soldiers is that "the people back home do not realize and do not care what they are undergoing."

Passage of the combat pay bill, he declared, "would show them that we do know that they are making sacrifices, that we do care, and do want to give con-

London Times—"In nominating his chief subordinates under the North Atlantic Treaty organization, in western, central and northern Europe, it is satisfactory that the Supreme Allied Commander has drawn deeply upon the last European experience, including that of Western Union. . . . Above all, it should not be forgotten, as has too often happened in the recent past, in civil as well as military affairs, that the higher organization is no more than a tool to make the thing work, not the thing itself. The tool will prove of little service unless the thing exists and is satisfactory in itself."

Washington, D. C., Star—"If the Russians should attack we are bound by treaty to go to war. But, without an actual attack, many situations may arise in which the presence of a few more American troops would spell the difference between success and failure in the effort to keep Western Europe from falling to the Russians. Since no one can foresee what these situations may be, the rational course would be to trust the judgment of General Eisenhower and the President, not to tie their hands."

New York Herald Tribune—"The new draft deferment plan for college students announced by President Truman strikes a severe blow at the idea of equality of service. Its actual effects on the armed forces' man-power problems will not be disastrous, for we can put together an army without the million or so men made eligible for deferment by Selective Service. But the principle that every young man must take his turn serving his country, whether he is richer, or smarter, or better educated than his neighbor, has the concentration area along main and secondary roads from Manchuria and northern Korea. On some days as many as 2,500 enemy vehicles were observed. These convoys were heavily attacked by Allied planes and hundreds of vehicles were destroyed or damaged.

General MacArthur's headquarters estimates that the enemy now has 63 divisions deployed along the 60-mile front, or in immediate support. This probably represents an aggregate strength of half a million, the largest number of enemy troops thus far committed to combat in Korea.

Among the 63 divisions are a number which were seriously battered by Allied ground and air attacks during the recent United Nations offensive. At least some of the heavy vehicular movements in North Korea are probably incident to the replacement of these battle-worn divisions by fresh enemy troops previously held in reserve.

Major Offensive Looms

Most observers expect another major offensive by the enemy within the next few weeks. They point to the heavy enemy buildup of troops and supplies and the approaching rainy season, which will hamper Allied air operations and mechanical road transport, as factors that may influence the Chinese Reds to make another desperate effort to defeat United Nations forces before writing off the Korean venture as a total loss. The obvious Allied tactics would be to continue probing attacks on Red defensive positions, to keep the Communists off balance so as to make it more difficult for them to mount an offensive.

Along most of the Korean front this

Atlantic Pact

The following statement was issued by Secretary of Defense Marshall on the second anniversary of the signing of the Atlantic Pact:

"Two years ago the Atlantic Pact was a solemn promise. Today it is a fact. Twelve sovereign nations have agreed on principles. There is a European defense force in being.

"During the first year the foundation was laid for mutual defense. In the second year the building of the structure was begun. This must be the year of great accomplishment, a year of strong determination and action to build up forces capable of deterring aggression.

"A great effort is called for, as well as profound understanding, sacrifice, tolerance, and the will to succeed. The Atlantic Pact is made up of free nations and their freedom must be guaranteed by our unified effort."

Boston Herald—"If the President's new Executive order on student draft deferment is intended to carry over into the universal military service and training program currently under consideration by Congress, it should be viewed with grave misgiving by all friends of the legislation. . . . The President's plan, despite its obvious constructive intent, goes far toward creating that aristocracy of education and wealth which the Defense Department has set itself to prevent in manpower procurement. Congress should continue to emphasize the universal in universal military service and training and seek for a less discriminatory way to protect our colleges and their specialist products."

Baltimore Sun—"Though the time for putting UMT into operation is not now, now is nevertheless the time for Congress to face up to the ultimate need for it and authorize its establishment. The present struggle in Korea aside, it is obvious that this country is confronted with something much more than an emergency. It is confronted with the need for keeping itself in condition of preparedness more or less indefinitely. For the long pull, UMT provides the best, the cheapest and the least militaristic method of doing this."

East St. Louis, Ill., Journal—"A MacArthur appearance before Congress would be an exciting show . . . but it is doubtful whether the general would get any sound advice from the Members nor whether he could tell them anything they could not now learn. General MacArthur is in the middle of a job, and we can reserve the festivities for later."

THE WAR IN KOREA

AMERICAN troops in force crossed the 38th parallel into North Korea on the western and west central fronts this week and advanced from four to eight miles against light to moderate resistance.

These advances do not represent a departure from the policy of not engaging in major military operations in enemy territory, but are rather probing attacks to maintain contact with Communist forces, most of which have withdrawn to strong defensive positions a few miles north of the 38th parallel.

Previously the South Korean Capital Division, with gunfire support from Allied warships, had advanced about 12 miles into North Korea, along the east coast, capturing several small villages.

These incursions into enemy territory apparently conform to the general policy of the United Nations, which permits tactical advances into North Korea for the purpose of safeguarding the security of Allied forces, but which does not contemplate an all-out invasion of enemy-held territory, north of the 38th parallel.

Gen. MacArthur to Front

General Douglas MacArthur, Commander-in-Chief of United Nations forces, made another trip to the front this week, visiting the South Korean Capital Division on the extreme eastern flank of the battle line. He said that Allied troops were committed to a war of maneuver, rather than positional warfare. He expressed himself as well satisfied with the present tactical situation.

Enemy air activity greatly increased in intensity this week, with scores of Red jet aircraft attacking American fighter planes on armed reconnaissance in Northwest Korea, near the Manchurian border.

In several encounters at least five enemy MIG-15 Russian-built jet fighters were destroyed and nine others damaged, with some of these regarded as probably destroyed. No American planes were shot down and only one was damaged.

The American planes participating in these air combats were F-80 Shooting Stars and F-86 Sabre Jets. When the enemy planes attacked the F-80s the faster F-86s, flying at higher levels, stormed in for the kill, shooting down or driving off enemy planes, which sought shelter in Manchurian territory, off limits for American aircraft.

Evidence of a heavy buildup of enemy ground troops continues to mount. Air observers this week reported exceptionally large movements of enemy trucks, most of them proceeding south toward week there was relatively little ground activity. The Allies retained the initiative, but confined their efforts largely to cautious and limited advances by armor and infantry and to aggressive patrolling in all sectors.

On the extreme western front South Korean elements crossed the Imjin River and engaged about 1,000 of the enemy, later withdrawing to the south and east bank of the winding river. The enemy was then attacked by air and artillery with excellent results. Other South Korean troops in the same general area stopped a sharp Red counterattack northwest of Munsan.

Allied troops northeast of Munsan made limited gains, with no significant enemy contacts. Light, scattered enemy resistance was encountered by advancing units southeast of Yonchon.

An American task force of armor and infantry moved across the 38th parallel into enemy territory along a 10-mile front in the Changam-ni area, reporting some opposition from mortar and artillery fire. This force took positions four miles inside North Korea. Patrols probed the area west of Yonggong-ni, encountering slight resistance.

On the west central front another armored-infantry force moved against the enemy in North Korea, meeting light to moderate opposition, and reaching a point two miles north of the 38th parallel.

On other parts of the central sector brief skirmishes with enemy troops up to company strength occurred as limited advances were made by Allied units. Light enemy contact was reported northeast of Chunchon.

Patrols in Contact

Patrols of South Korean troops on the eastern front were in contact with the enemy along the 38th parallel during the week. An undetermined number of Reds resisted the advance of South Koreans north of Hyon-ni.

The Capital Division of Republic of Korea troops reached a point west of Yangyang, about 13 miles north of the 38th parallel. They were in contact with small enemy forces, remnants of those dispersed by gunfire from the U. S. Destroyer Hank, which stood off the east coast to support the South Korean advance.

It was announced in Washington this week that Communist forces in Korea had suffered losses totaling 760,300, from the beginning of the war on 25 June 1950 through 22 March 1951. The last previous estimate made on 20 Feb. was 624,000, indicating enemy casualties of 136,000 in about a month of the recent heavy fighting.

The most recent estimate shows a total

THE EUROPEAN COMMAND

ON 2 April, the second anniversary (lacking a day) of the start of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, General Eisenhower declared Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers in Europe to be operational, and he himself assumed formal command with SHAPE's General Order 1.

In the United States a day later, President Truman issued a formal statement on the anniversary, and Defense Secretary George C. Marshall his own terse remark that NATO's first year had laid a foundation for mutual defense of the West, that its second year had begun the building of the structure (the first shipment of arms under the military aid program began in April 1950), and that its third year now beginning "must be a year of accomplishment." The prospect is that it will be such a year, despite the Senate's unfortunate vote of last Monday on a cloudily worded amendment to the troops-for-Europe plan.

The blank spaces in the SHAPE organization have been reduced by one, with General Eisenhower's designation of Vice Admiral André George Lemmonier as his naval deputy. That echelon immediately under the Supreme Commander now is complete, with Field Marshal Montgomery (appearing at least) as holder of the ground deputyship as well as the post of immediate deputy to the Supreme Command, and with Air Chief Marshal Sir Hugh Saunders in the corresponding post for air. Thus there are one French and two British high-deputies.

Mediterranean Program

The largest blanks, as this is written, are in the several commands of the Southern Sector, a situation scheduled to be remedied soon after the expected announcement (probably at the weekend) of NATO's setting-up of the Mediterranean program. Initially it was thought that SHAPE's Southern Sector would exercise a large control in the Mediterranean, but the vast potential importance of that sea and its adjacent shores, plus certain considerations in the realm of world politics, have led to a reappraisal. And as the relative importance of the Mediterranean command has risen in NATO esteem (of which more will be said later) the stature of the Southern Sector of the European command has been somewhat reduced; but until the Mediterranean command's authority should be firmly stated, it was impossible to determine that of the Southern Sector, and inadvisable to appoint the sector's commanders—further than to state that the ground force deputy in the sector will be an Italian general, so far unnamed.

The political aspects of Mediterranean planning transcend those which are purely military, in that a command of maximum efficiency would of necessity exercise authority in the extrem west (i.e. Spain) and in the extreme east (i.e. Greece and Turkey). And none of the three nations named is a member of NATO. The first of them is still in an extremely delicate diplomatic position with regard to Britain and France; yet it is impossible to ignore either America's recent restoration of the embassy at Madrid or the sturdy and persistent interest shown by American naval leaders (beginning with Admiral Richard L. Connelly when he commanded the U.S. Naval Forces in the Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean) in the desirability of such valuable potential bases as Ferrol and Vigo on the west, and Barcelona on the east.

Greece and Turkey

As to Greece and Turkey, both have been greatly helped by American aid, both show already an undoubted leaning toward the west rather than to Moscow, and both have strategic positions infinitely valuable to anybody exploiting the Mediterranean.

It will be remembered that even when the World War II Allies shifted the weight of their attack northward and General Eisenhower took over SHAEF, the Mediterranean Theater remained a separate entity, under different command. It will also be remembered that the United States in particular now has a profound interest in potential large air bases in North Africa; that at Tripoli (now used by MATS) has been much discussed; five possibilities in French Morocco, mentioned in a great many unofficial dispatches in recent weeks, are still off the list of official conversation subjects at the Pentagon. Hence the usefulness of a full naval control in the Mediterranean, as bearing on the security and supply of air bases on either shore, need not be argued. Nor for that matter is there doubt that operating air bases ashore would be of interest to the controller of the adjacent waters.

Clarify Authority

This is clear enough, despite NATO's delay (largely due to the political complications referred to) in reaching a decision on the basic Mediterranean set-up. It also explains General Eisenhower's own inability to do any firm planning of his Southern Sector until there should be a clear decision on the scope of the Mediterranean Area's authority. The expected week-end announcement by NATO will make possible shortly the completion of SHAPE's command set-up.

Further clarification of SHAPE's future is unofficially reported from London, where the political, economic, and production offices of NATO have been housed. It appears that the State Department has felt that there would be greater efficiency in operating them in Paris, not far from SHAPE. But the State Department's proposal to move them across the Channel did not meet with SHAPE's endorsement, and SHAPE won the argument.

Thus London will keep the Political Committee (the Council of Deputies of which Charles M. Spofford is American member), the Defense Production Board (William R. Herod representing the United States), and the military production coordinating staff known as the Joint American Military Assistance Group (Maj. Gen. A. Franklin Kibler). Paris and vicinity will house SHAPE with all its military dependencies and also the Marshall Plan's European headquarters (Milton Katz, special representative of the Economic Cooperative Administration). NATO's information organization is still a variable; there are many reasons for placing it under General Eisenhower, and it may well go to SHAPE.

On all this, as on the Mediterranean Area matter and on a good many politically explosive subjects, General Eisenhower remains discreetly and genially silent. In a full-size Paris press conference last Tuesday, before some 200 correspondents from a great many nations, he allowed his hearers to conclude that he thinks he has enough of a job in organizing, training and deploying the forces which 12 NATO nations are giving him. He admitted skepticism about the French plan for a European army without separate national character, observing politely that there is no precedent for such an establishment, and it would need "a great deal of political and administrative work." He apparently thinks he has about enough of that already in his hands.

Armed Forces Day

In a White House ceremony on 2 April, President Truman proclaimed 19 May 1951 Armed Forces Day—a day devoted to honoring the members of the Armed Forces who have dedicated themselves unselfishly as "the defenders of our people, our Nation, and our democratic way of life."

Pointing out that the Armed Forces "are now fighting and dying on foreign soil in defense of the principles of freedom which this Nation has cherished since its birth," the President invited State and Territorial Governors to provide for the celebration of Armed Forces Day on 19 May in a manner which will honor the members of the Armed Forces.

He requested citizens to display the flag on Armed Forces Day "and by fitting exercises to demonstrate their recognition of the gallantry, sacrifice, and devotion to duty of the men and women of the Armed Forces."

Witnessing the signing were the Secretary of Defense, General Marshall; Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr.; Secretary of the Navy Francis P. Matthews; Secretary of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter; the Joint Chiefs of Staff (General Omar N. Bradley, Chairman; General J. Lawton Collins, Chief of Staff of the Army; Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, and General Hoyt T. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force); and Lt. Gen. Merwin H. Silverthorn, Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps.

The President, as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, directed the Secretary of Defense, and the three military departmental Secretaries "to mark the designated day with appropriate ceremonies and to cooperate with civil authorities in suitable observances of the day." Steps already taken in that direction include the division of the United States into seven geographical areas, with one of the military departments charged with primary responsibility for celebrations in each area.

Armed Forces Day project officers have been designated at each local Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine installation and facility. These project officers have spent the last month planning local observances.

The text of the President's proclamation follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS the armed forces of the United States, having dedicated themselves unselfishly to the service of their country, are now fighting and dying on foreign soil in defense of the principles of freedom which this Nation has cherished since its birth; and

WHEREAS it is appropriate that we dedicate one day each year to paying tribute to the armed forces and to rendering homage to them as the defenders of our people, our Nation, and our democratic way of life;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, HARRY S. TRUMAN, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Saturday, 19 May, 1951, as Armed Forces Day; and I invite the Governors of the States, Territories, and possessions of the United States to provide for the celebration of that day in such manner as to honor the members of our armed forces.

As Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the United States, I direct the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to mark the designated day with appropriate ceremonies, and to cooperate with civil authorities in suitable observances of the day.

I also request my fellow citizens to display the flag of the United States on Armed Forces Day, and by fitting exercises to demonstrate their recognition of the gallantry, sacrifice, and devotion to duty of the men and women of the armed forces.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this second day of April in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and seventy-fifth.

Harry S. Truman
By the President:
Dean Acheson
Secretary of State.

Subsequently, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States called on American business to cooperate fully in observance of Armed Forces Day. The date has just been fixed by the Department of Defense.

The Chamber's board of directors adopted a resolution submitted by its Committee on National Defense urging chambers of commerce, trade associations and other National Chamber members to participate in local observances which will be held to promote better public understanding of the objectives of the Armed Forces.

The Chamber has consistently supported adequate national defense on the basis that armed strength is necessary for preservation of peace. It holds that economic and military weaknesses in the past proved to be an open invitation to aggression.

Mr. Dunlap C. Clark, president of the Central Bank of Oakland, Calif., chairman of the Chamber's National Defense Committee, pointed out to the Chamber's membership that Armed Forces Day should be an important means of furthering the defense program.

Universal Service Bill

The success or failure of the energetic efforts of the President and the Department of Defense to obtain the basic building stone for a long-range program of military preparedness hinges upon the outcome of action by the House of Representatives on the Universal Military Training and Service legislation, which was begun this week.

Leading the fight for passage of the oft-sought measure is one of the most influential members of Congress, Representative Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee. Sparking the opposition is the ranking minority member of that Committee, Representative Dewey Short (R-Mo.), who maintains that while Selective Service must be continued, UMT is "anti-American and totally foreign."

In the face of a reported strengthening of opposition to UMT, Chairman Vinson took the floor to plead for its enactment.

"We must meet the present emergency and at the same time we must establish a long-range preparedness and training program," Mr. Vinson asserted. "That is what this bill does."

He warned that the present system of raising large armies for short periods of time, followed by complete and total demobilization, results in waste and extravagance and "will lead to economic chaos."

To continue this policy in the face of conditions of modern war, Representative Vinson continued, "will surely invite disaster."

Said Congressman Vinson:

"This tremendous urge for an all-out effort in time of emergency, followed by a let down after the emergency has passed, plays right into the hands of the Soviet Union. If we do not adopt a system based upon a permanent plan for preparedness and training for the years to come, we are on the road to wreck the economy of the Nation."

"For the foreseeable future and perhaps beyond, this Nation has no alternative but to be ready for any form of aggression that may be forced upon us."

"To meet this situation, the Joint Chiefs of Staff have determined that the minimum security requirements of this Nation require an armed force of 3,462,000 men by July 1, 1951. But they do not guarantee and cannot guarantee that this force may not have to be increased. No human being can possibly predict what the size of our Armed Forces will have to be 1 year, 6 months, or even 3 months from now. How dangerous, how short-sighted, how unrealistic it would be in these perilous times in which we live today, to write in this bill a rigid statutory limitation on the number of men our Nation can have under arms to defend her liberties."

(Note: As passed by the Senate, the legislation limits the Armed Forces to a total strength of 4,000,000.)

"No Member of this House, nor even the Joint Chiefs of Staff, can accurately forecast what the military needs of the Nation will be tomorrow, or a week from tomorrow, or 6 months or a year from now. No one can tell. The only thing we do know is that we must

Demands Action On Marine Corps Bill

Charging that "it is clear from both the past history and from present actions that those who direct the policies of the Department of Defense do not intend to permit the Marine Corps to be a vigorous combat organization, Senator Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.)—himself a wartime Marine Corps officer—yesterday, 6 April, called for enactment of legislation to give the Marine Corps four full strength combatant divisions, four air wings and appropriate supporting troops.

The measure would permit a Marine Corps of 400,000 men and it would stipulate that the Commandant of the Marine Corps be a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Senator Douglas said he has the assurance of Senator Richard Russell (D-Ga.), Chairman of the Armed Services Committee that hearings on the bill will be started "within the next few days."

Senator Douglas stressed that the Joint Chiefs of Staff "are men of fine character and are sincere patriots," but he said, "the majority of them are Army-minded and are definitely opposed to the Marine Corps as a combatant organization."

The Illinois legislator said of the Joint Chiefs: "Notwithstanding their many expressions of good will toward the Marine Corps they have nevertheless tried to destroy its capability to function on any appreciable scale in combat."

Concluding his statement, Senator Douglas declared:

"I have not felt it necessary to extoll the virtues or the capabilities of the Marine Corps. Its record speaks for itself. The Congress in carrying out its Constitutional requirement to provide for the common defense, has indicated time and again that they desire a combatant Marine Corps. The Executive Branch of the Government has chosen to ignore the intent of Congress. We cannot stand idly by and see our defense structure weakened due to inter-service rivalries and jealousies of the most petty nature."

"Therefore, the Congress must speak in clear and unmistakable language. By so doing it is not assuming the functions of an armchair strategist. It is merely carrying out the responsibility placed upon it by our forefathers. Speaking personally and for the 43 co-sponsors of this legislation, I resent the methods of the Armed Services that have been used to set aside our intent in carrying out our responsibility."

"I do not believe that there will be a single voice raised against the fact that we need a combatant Marine Corps. I do not believe that there will be a single ear which will listen to the arguments that will be advanced against this legislation. If that should happen I sincerely trust that the majority of us will debate this bill so thoroughly that the issues can be clearly understood. Then after the legislation is passed and becomes law that there will be no further question raised about what we intend so far as the Marine Corps is concerned."

OK Air Force General

The Senate Armed Services Committee on 5 April voted to confirm the nomination of Brig. Gen. Wallace Graham, USAFR, physician to the White House, in the grade of major general. There was one dissenting vote—Senator Knowland (R-Calif.). Mr. Knowland stated he did not wish to file a minority report, however.

Senator Cain moved and the motion was adopted by the full Committee that a study be made by the Committee Staff as to whether by statute the position as physician to the President should be established as a 2-star rank and that this 2-star rank not be chargeable to the 2-star allocations of the three services. This study will be under way and a report made later.

This action cleared the way for confirmation of providing nominations of other Air Force general officers.

New Sub-Command of NYPE

On 1 April, the Staten Island Port Installation was established as a subordinate command of the New York Port of Embarkation to be known as Staten Island Terminal, it was announced by Brig. Gen. Edward H. Lastayo, USA, Port Commander.

Army Launches Rotation Monthly Goal 20,000

On the eve of his departure for a visit to the Far East, Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr. on 5 April announced that the first Army troops will be rotated from Korea about the middle of this month, with a monthly rotation of 20,000 scheduled to be in effect by early summer.

This means that by the summer the equivalent of one division per month will be rotated from the combat zone.

Following is the complete text of the Army's statement on the rotation program:

"The Secretary of the Army, Frank Pace, Jr., announced today that the Army's rotation plan for relieving its combat personnel in Korea will become effective about the middle of this month when the first combat veterans sail from Korea.

"Preference will normally be given to those who have served in the frontline in Korea for the longest time. General MacArthur, of course, will determine the policy governing the selection of men to be relieved.

"The Secretary of the Army emphasized that the rate at which the program can be built up will depend not only on the arrival in Korea of replacements from the United States but also upon the necessity to maintain the combat effectiveness of the units. The exact number of individuals arriving in the Far East Command will, in general, set the number that can be rotated. The rotation will continue on an accelerated basis until it reaches about 20,000 individuals relieved each month. It is anticipated that this level can be reached by early summer. The rate of rotation will naturally be affected by the intensity of the fighting in Korea.

"While it is planned to return directly to the United States as many individuals as possible initially, later on some personnel after relief from Korea may be assigned to garrison duty in Japan or other parts of the Far East Command. Subsequently, they too will be returned to the United States.

"The personnel returning will unload either at Seattle, Washington, or San Francisco, California. All individuals under this plan will be afforded the opportunity to go on leave enroute to their next assignments."

Secy. to Visit Far East

On 6 April, Secretary Pace accompanied by several officers of the Army General Staff, left Washington for a two-week visit to the Far East Command and other Pacific areas.

The itinerary will include Hawaii, Wake Island, Tokyo, Korea, Okinawa, Manila, and Guam. The group is scheduled to return to Washington Saturday, 21 April.

Secretary Pace said the primary purpose of the visit is "to obtain more intimate and detailed knowledge of our operations in Korea through the spot observation and conferences." Every General Staff Division in the Army, as well as the Office, Chief of Staff, will be represented in the Secretary's party.

The group stopped at Camp Carson, Colo., yesterday afternoon for a short

Reports On Frostbite

Speaking before the 24th Annual Spring Congress at Gill Memorial Hospital, Roanoke, Virginia on 2 April, Maj. General Paul H. Streit, USA, Commanding General, Army Medical Center, Washington, D. C., delivered an address on "Cold Injury With Particular Reference to Frostbite."

The General said that in November 1950 American forces in Korea were suddenly involved in subzero temperatures and suffered many casualties from cold. As of 9 Feb. 1951, the Army had a total of 4,914 cold injury cases, of which 4,503 were treated in Korea or Japan. Of the 411 returned to the States, 13.8 percent lost some tissue as a result of this injury, and 3.2 percent had major amputations.

The General stated that "specific antibiotic therapy, early ambulation, and physiotherapy permitted more than one-third of the cases at Walter Reed to go on Christmas leave 14 days after arrival at the hospital."

of 543,000 enemy battle casualties, not including 141,300 prisoners of war, and 76,000 non-battle casualties. Of the battle casualties 260,000 were Chinese Communists and 283,000 North Korean Reds. Of the non-battle casualties 31,000 were Chinese and 45,000 North Koreans. As of 22 March the Allies were holding 139,000 North Koreans and only 2,300 Chinese Reds as prisoners of war.

An Associated Press survey places Allied losses in Korea from the beginning of the conflict to 31 March 1951 at 229,061, less than one-third of the number suffered by the Reds. Of the United Nations casualties 168,653 were suffered by the South Koreans, 57,120 by the Americans, and 3,289 by the other Allies. There were 1,170 Turkish casualties, 980 British, and 396 French. Other nationalities sustained relatively minor losses.

Gen. Ridgway's Tribute

In an interview published in the Army newspaper, Stars and Stripes, Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, commanding the Eighth Army in Korea, paid a warm tribute to the fighting qualities of American soldiers and to the Allied troops under his command. He said the American soldiers "have now acquired poise and self-reliance, born of confidence, which gives them pride in themselves." He added that this statement also applies to all United Nations forces.

The general said that there are no finer soldiers anywhere than the Americans who "will rise to any height and demand placed upon them." He praised "the manner in which they have licked weather and terrain."

"They have beat the other fellow while they were doing it," he said. "It is the stamp of the professional soldier." He added that the individual American soldier "never does more physically than his spiritual strength permits." Continuing he said:

"The spiritual is to the physical three to one, or a thousand to one, you might say."

"There was a time when the men would walk in the valleys instead of on the ridges. Now they know they have to dominate the heights."

"It takes great physical endurance to do so, but the men have taken it in stride—they know it is a job they have to do, and they have done it."

General Ridgway said leadership in the United Nations forces is built on confidence and respect, commenting:

"There is a mutual respect born of mutual confidence, derived from one thing: demonstrated performance on the battlefield."

"There are 15 different nationalities under my command, and the same respect which has imbued leadership in American forces with its polished results is displayed in the attitude of all those who fight together."

"There is the same mutual confidence. American troops who have the French or the British, the Turks or the Greeks, or any of the others on their flanks know they'll be there when the chips are down.

"They feel the same way about us. This is truly a United Nations."

American replacements, arriving in Korea, General Ridgway said, are well-trained and are quickly assimilated in the organizations to which they are assigned.

Night Bombing

Allied Naval forces this week increased the intensity of their night bombardment of enemy transportation networks on the east coast of North Korea, pounding roads, railroad yards, truck convoys and troop concentrations.

The bombardment of the east coast port of Wonsan entered its seventh consecutive week, breaking all American Naval records for continuous attack on an enemy city.

During the Civil War, Union gunboats bombarded Vicksburg for 42 consecutive days, until now the record for such an operation. The uninterrupted bombardment of Wonsan has now surpassed the Vicksburg record and, if continued, will reach the fiftieth day on Sunday, 8 April. The attack on Wonsan this week was led by the U.S. Heavy Cruiser St. Paul, which poured 8-inch shells on road junctions and other military targets.

Bridges, roads and railroads at Songjin were fired on with 4 and 5-inch guns of the U.S. Destroyers Lind and O'Brien and the British Frigate Alacrity. They were joined for a few hours by the 8-inch guns of the St. Paul which moved north temporarily for part of a day and then returned to Wonsan.

Farther north at Chongjin the U.S. Destroyer Massey and the Destroyer-

Minesweeper Thompson shelled transportation lines near the shore and small craft in the harbor.

Far to the south, almost at the 38th parallel, the U.S. Destroyer Hank furnished gunfire support for the South Korean Capital Division moving north along the east coast. Supply dumps, storehouses, vehicles and troops were hit by Naval fire from the warship. Air spotters reported excellent firing by the destroyer north of Kansong, where 18 enemy-occupied buildings and six supply points were destroyed.

USS Missouri Returning

The battleship Missouri, with 2,000 officers and men aboard, arrived at Pearl Harbor on Thursday of this week, en route to the United States after more than six and a half months of almost continuous combat in Korean waters.

The Navy said the big ship is being returned to the U. S. as a part of the current policy of rotating ships and personnel for the war zone where possible.

The Missouri left Norfolk, Va., on 19 Aug. 1950, steaming approximately 10,000 miles to join the UN forces on 14 Sept.—just 25 days after departure from the East Coast. The only U. S. battleship in commission at the time, she weathered a hurricane off Cape Hatteras, a typhoon off Panama, and another typhoon off southern Japan.

On arrival in Korean waters the Missouri became the flagship of Vice Adm. Arthur D. Struble, commander of the Seventh Fleet, and operated with our fast carrier task forces except when doing bombardment and fire support work.

Effects of the Missouri's guns have been felt on both coasts of the Korean peninsula. More than 3,000 rounds of 16 inch ammunition and over 8,000 rounds of five-inch ammunition have been fired since she arrived in the Far East. Although she had been at sea for 54 consecutive days at the time she played an important role in the evacuation of Army and Marine forces from Hungnam on 24 Dec.

On 24 March the Missouri was relieved as flagship of the U. S. Seventh Fleet when Vice Adm. Harold M. Martin took over from Admiral Struble at Yokosuka, Japan. Admiral Struble, who assumes command of the U. S. First Fleet, is returning aboard his former flagship.

The Missouri is commanded by Capt. George C. Wright, USN, who replaced Capt. Irving T. Duke, on 2 March 1951.

Marine LDO Appointments

The Marine Corps has announced that all Limited Duty Officer selections made during 1951 will be for the rank of second lieutenant in the Regular Marine Corps.

A Marine Corps Memorandum pointed out that "there is no need for LDO's in the Marine Corps Reserve and no appointments for Limited Duty in the MCR are contemplated." The only personnel of the MCR who are eligible for appointment as second lieutenants for Limited Duty are former enlisted men of the regular Marine Corps who accepted appointments in the MCR during World War II and have served continuously on active duty since that time.

Applications must reach HQMC not later than 1 June 1951, and applicants must meet the following maximum age and service requirements:

(1) Temporary officers, whose permanent status is enlisted, warrant officer or commissioned warrant officer now serving in temporary commissioned grades of second lieutenant or above, are eligible for consideration provided they were less than forty (40) years of age and had less than fifteen (15) years' total active naval service on 1 Jan. 1951.

(2) Temporary or permanent warrant officers and commissioned warrant officers, now serving in those grades, and enlisted men of the ranks of technical sergeant and master sergeant are eligible for consideration provided they were less than thirty-seven (37) years of age and had less than thirteen years (13) years' total active naval service on 1 Jan. 1951.

(3) Must have completed a minimum of ten (10) years' active naval service, exclusive of active duty for training in a reserve component, on 1 Jan. 1951.

(4) Must be able to complete a total of thirty (30) years' active naval service, exclusive of active duty for training in a reserve component, prior to reaching fifty-five (55) years of age.

Release Marine Reserves

The Marine Corps, pending approval of the Defense Department, will begin releasing Reservists to inactive duty sometime this summer—probably in June—providing the international situation continues to improve.

An ALMAR, containing detailed instructions to Marine commanders in the field, was nearing completion and was expected to be sent out next week. It was learned this week that the Defense directive has delayed the issuance of the ALMAR, which will be held in abeyance until the necessary approval for the plan is received.

The ALMAR, when published, will list the categories and numbers of Reservists to be released.

Rail Accommodations

The Navy has modified its policy regarding the authorization of superior accommodations at Government expense for personnel travelling by rail.

Under arrangements made with the Pullman Company, the Navy said, holders of transportation requests of military agencies for berths (uppers or lowers) will be furnished berths in room accommodations when the only sleeping accommodations available in the train to be used are in an all-room car. Exceptions will be made where room-type accommodations are authorized at Government expense for security reasons, for patients and attendants, and for prisoners and guards.

The arrangement applies to travel of all Naval and Marine Corps personnel and does not affect the present arrangement of the Pullman Company for furnishing berth accommodations at berth rates in rooms in sleeping cars containing both room and section space.

Marine EM Promotions

The Marine Corps has announced that allocations for enlisted promotions will be published to the field about 15 April, and that the number is expected to exceed those allocated in the fall of 1950.

Universal Service Bill

have an adequate force to meet any military emergency that may arise."

Concerning the economy ramifications of the UMT bill, Chairman Vinson said that it might be possible in two years, with UMT in effect, to cut the active-duty strength of the Armed Forces to 2,000,000. Failure to pass the bill, he declared, would require 4,000,000 men in uniform "indefinitely."

Chairman Vinson told his colleagues the bill represents a "decision of crucial importance. Amplifying this, he said:

"The Nation is truly at the crossroads. The choice is crystal clear. We can choose, as set out in this bill, military preparedness—immediate preparedness and sustained, lasting preparedness. Or we choose to continue that bloodstained, costly, and perilous course of entrusting our freedoms and our national security to the fickle hope that our enemies will in the future, as they have in the past, give us time to prepare."

"How easy it is when our Nation is not involved in all-out war, and when the freedom being destroyed is not our very own, to forget the basic facts of international life—to keep our attention riveted on the easy way—to continue to demand business as usual, to seek to return to the good old days. How easy it is to believe that when the freedom being lost is far away and not our own, it is not a matter of American concern. But that is the easy road, the road of fantasy unrelated to the facts before us."

Soviet Strength Cited

"Every Member of this House knows that, basically, the world situation has not yet improved. It is common knowledge that Russia has at least 175 ready divisions—a 4,000,000-man Army—that she has some 300 submarines, many of them snorkels—far more than Germany had at the beginning of the last war—that she has over 400 mighty bombers capable of attacking our cities from Seattle to Washington—from Chicago to San Francisco. Every member of this Committee knows that the atom bomb is in the hands of the Soviet Union and being produced in daily increasing numbers. We all know that there is a military vacuum today in Western Europe and that if Russia's mighty military power is turned in that direction, and if we and our allies have insufficient power to resist, ultimately our own land and our very existence will be placed in jeopardy."

"Yes, and we now know the most terrible fact of all. We now know that the rulers of the Soviet Union are willing to resort to the direct use of military force, as we have seen in Korea. We know that in a short space of time Russia will have a sufficient stockpile of atomic bombs as to be capable of initiating a terrible aerial attack on our cities and homes whenever she wishes to do so. We know that the Soviet Union's ambitions are boundless—that the Russians are brutal and remorseless—that they are firmly intent upon bringing pressure all over the world until their plan for world conquest is carried through. In each and every generation the time comes to preserve and maintain its liberties, for itself and the future. That task and challenge is with us today."

World Situation Precarious

"We are living in an atomic age; we are living in a time when 85 per cent of the industrial production of the Soviet Union is devoted to the munitions of war. Until recently we were even reducing the size of our Armed Forces, while the Russians were expanding their already gigantic military machine. Our industries were producing washing machines, vacuum cleaners, and television sets, while the Soviet Union was producing rockets, tanks, and machine guns. While we were producing for the happiness and the peaceful pursuits of life, the Soviet Union was developing the means by which she could engage in an all-out war. We all know how precarious the world situation still is. Just the other day the Secretary of Defense stated that in his opinion world conditions are, if anything, worse than they were a year ago. Not long ago General Vandenberg warned the Nation that although we are rapidly building a radar fence and expanding our Air Force, we could not possibly intercept all enemy bombers that might attack our cities. Some would get through, destroy our great industrial centers and kill or maim hundreds of thousands of our citizens."

"We have started a program to increase our military production for the defense of the Nation, but if we fail to have the trained military personnel, weapons of war will be useless. Will we hide our world conditions as threatening, as unheads in the sands of complacency, with predictable, and as tense as they are today? I say no. Mr. Chairman. We must be prepared for any eventuality, and it is imperative that be done at once."

Leading the opposition to UMT was Representative Short, one of three members of the Armed Services Committee to oppose the measure in committee. Mr. Short said:

"The draft is a temporary piece of legislation in the face of an emergency. It is necessary and indispensable, and we all know that we must, under present conditions, continue the draft until such changes occur that will warrant the repeal of it. But peace-time universal military training and service is a permanent thing here, and that is what the sponsors want—to militarize the country. The time to subject men and boys to draft is in time of war or imminent war. When the war is over, is no time to build up a huge military machine in this country."

PUSH-BUTTON SELF-STARTER FOR THE FIRST U. S. TURBOPROP TRANSPORT

ANOTHER AIRESARCH FIRST!

A flick of the switch... a 2750 hp Allison 501 engine roars into action. Seconds later a twin 501 is fired... and America's first turboprop airliner is ready for takeoff.

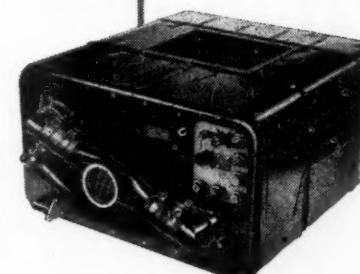

It's the Convair Turboliner purchased by Allison Division of General Motors to demonstrate turboprop engines in air transports. This is the first turbine powered airliner in the world able to start its own engines an unlimited number of times.

This self-starting system was pioneered by AiResearch, working with the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics. A low pressure pneumatic system, it consists basically of a small gas turbine the size of a hand valise and two small air turbine starters. It is the only self-contained, continuous self-starting system for turboprop and turbojet engines light enough to be airborne!

Development of the AiResearch low pressure pneumatic power system was begun six years ago. It is also being used on the Navy Convair XP5Y turboprop flying boat and the Navy Douglas A2D turboprop dive bomber now in production.

Another AiResearch first—this system reflects our technical skills and ability to solve problems of unusual difficulty in the field of aeronautics.

USAF Has Many Vacancies At Top of Promotion List

Release of the 1951 Air Force Register—now available from the U. S. Government Printing Office at a cost of $2—has focused attention on the present status of the USAF Promotion List.

What is revealed in a survey made by THE JOURNAL, and based on data later than that reflected in the Register, official as of 1 Jan., is the fact that, contrary to widespread belief, the Air Force has a number of vacancies for permanent promotion at the top of its list.

For example, the Air Force is authorized by law to have 75 per cent of its permanent officer strength in general officer ranks, with a 150 numerical ceiling imposed in the Officer Personnel Act. Actually, latest statistics reveal that the Air Force has only 116 permanent officers in general officer ranks, which means that there are 34 vacancies here.

In the rank of permanent colonel, the Air Force is permitted to have 8 per cent of its officers, a total of 1983. Actual strength is 901, which means that there are 1082 vacancies, or 1116 cumulative vacancies when the general office slots are added.

This shows that there is ample flexibility in the USAF Promotion List and means that the much-discussed "bulge" is not nearly as critical as previously indicated.

The accumulative vacancies in the general officer and colonel ranks are reduced somewhat by projected overages in the number of permanent lieutenant colonels and majors. The statistics below reflect officers previously selected for permanent advancement to the rank of lieutenant colonel and major, some of whom have received accelerated permanent promotions recently, because, having been named for permanent advancement, they were not eligible for consideration for temporary promotion to these ranks. The figures presented on the actual strength of permanent lieutenant colonels and majors include also officers previously selected, but who will be promoted over a period of some months.

With regard to permanent lieutenant colonels on duty in that rank or selected for promotion, the Air Force is authorized to have 14 per cent of its permanent officers—a total of 3469—in that rank. The Air Force will have 3834 officers in this grade, 365 more than stipulated, but authorized by law when sufficient vacancies in higher grades exist. Consequently this overage is easily handled.

In the rank of permanent major, compared to a percentage authorization of 19 and a numerical limit of 4706, the Air Force will have, when the recent selections are implemented by promotion orders, a total of 4847 permanent majors, 135 over the limit. However, accumulative vacancies will be 616.

These accumulative vacancies are increased to 1382 when the rank of permanent captain is considered, for here the Air Force is authorized 23 per cent of its Regular officers—a total of 5700. Actual strength is 4934, a deficiency of 766.

Similarly, in the rank of permanent first lieutenant, where 18 per cent authorization obtains, the Air Force has 2837 permanent officers, compared to the 4461 authorized. So that the accumulative vacancies now total 3006.

In the rank of second lieutenant, the percentage authorization is 18; the numerical limit is 4461. Actual strength is 1973, which means that there are 2488 vacancies, bringing to a total of 5494 the number of vacancies on the entire promotion list.

It is emphasized that the foregoing analysis pertains exclusively to the USAF Promotion List. Not included are permanent Medical Service and Chaplain officers.

Since only 77.3 per cent of the general officer and 45 per cent of the authorized colonel vacancies are filled, ample room is provided for promotions in the top categories. This will permit the Air Force to maintain its promotion list on a sound basis over a long period of time.

This data will be reassuring to Regular officers, for much concern has been expressed that the promotion list was "top heavy" and that as a result a relatively high pass-over rate might be expected.

The Air Force's recent decision to utilize the "fully qualified" instead of the "best qualified" method in all selections below the rank of permanent colonel is an indication of the improved situation with regard to the spread of permanent rank in ratio to permanent vacancies.

Honor Civilian Employee

More than 30 years of service with the Air Force and its predecessor organizations, and 43 years of total federal service, were honored last week when Miss Josephine Martin Reeve ended her civilian service career that began in 1908 in Washington.

Members of USAF Headquarters attended a luncheon given in her honor at the Pentagon. Among those present were Brig. Gen. C. R. Landon, Director of Statistical Service, USAF Headquarters and Col. C. E. Beasley, Chief of Personnel Statistics Division.

A letter of commendation from General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, noted that "the achievement and progress of the United States Air Force would not have been possible without the steady, consistent work which has been done from day to day by Air Force personnel—both military and civilian—who worked like you in quiet ways to do a good job."

Legal Specialists Needed

Current Air Force needs for fully trained legal specialists were highlighted this week as officials at USAF Institute of Technology (USAFIT) at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, announced plans for a concentrated graduate course in legislative law.

The new program is designed to prepare selected AF officers for the job of assisting in preparation of the Air Force legislative program and acting as liaison between Congress and the Department of the Air Force.

According to USAFIT authorities "emergency legislation necessitated by the present world situation has effectively illustrated the necessity of having well-trained legal advisers available at all times."

Site of the course will be a Washington, D. C. university so that students may have close contact with Legislative, Judicial, and Executive branches of government, the Supreme Court, Federal Trade Commission and various other administrative departments.

Requirements for admission include a bachelor's degree, preferably in law. Men will be chosen whose civilian and military record shows substantial indications of promise as a legislative officer.

Details regarding request for evaluation, application and other eligibility criteria are outlined in AF Regulation 50-15. Interested officers are urged to take early action in submitting request for evaluation to Commandant, USAFIT, Wright-Patterson AFB.

Upon successful completion of this course officers will be awarded a master's degree and will be assigned to duty with the Directorate of Legislation and Liaison, USAF. The training will also qualify officers for future assignment as air or military attaches, members of military missions or to positions within the Mutual Defense Assistance program.

Commands Troop Carrier Force

Maj. Gen. Robert W. Douglass, Jr., USAF, special assistant to the Commander-in-Chief U. S. Air Forces Europe, was named this week by Lt. Gen. John K. Cannon, USAF, Commanding General, Tactical Air Command, to head the recently activated 18th Air Force at Donaldson AFB, Greenville, S. C.

When General Cannon was in command of USAFE, General Douglass was his chief of staff.

The 18th Air Force (Troop Carrier) consists of all the troop carrier wings in the United States. It is responsible for the organization, training and combat readiness of all Troop Carrier elements in the Zone of Interior.

AF Explains Officer Grade Adjustment

The Air Force has dispatched to its major commands an explanation of the current policy affecting those Reserve officers serving on active duty in the AFUS in grades lower than their Reserve rank.

This is the substance of what the Air Force had to say:

The recent grade adjustment program was designed to give these officers an opportunity to compete for promotion together with their contemporaries in the regular service who would have been eligible for a terminal leave promotion had they been reserve officers. Subsequent temporary promotion programs will give these officers who failed of selection additional opportunities to compete for temporary promotions.

In view of the restrictive number of promotions, it is necessary that only the best qualified officers be promoted to fill current and anticipated vacancies. While reserve officers serving in a lower grade should be given every consideration for such promotions, the requirement for promoting the best man available precludes the automatic promotion of any group of officers.

Officers serving in a grade lower than their reserve grade are on active duty in a volunteer status until such time as their current service statement expires and they have submitted a formal request for relief from active duty.

Upon expiration of current service statement those officers serving in a grade lower than their reserve grade will be given the opportunity to continue on active duty on a volunteer basis in their current AFUS grade. Officers in this category, who do not desire to continue in a volunteer status will be authorized to submit a written request for relief from active duty.

Officers relieved from active duty under this policy will be eligible for recall to active duty in their reserve grade on the same basis as are all other reserve officers in an inactive status. They should be informed that they will not receive preferential consideration for recall and that any future active duty will be contingent upon the requirements of the Air Force for their skill in their reserve grade.

USAF Auditor General

district offices geographically located in the Zone of Interior. The chief of each district reports direct to the Auditor General. All members of the audit staff, therefore, report through their respective district headquarters to the Auditor General in Washington. The district offices are responsible for the performance of all audits within their geographic areas. This is accomplished through branch offices where there are sufficient short-time audits required in a particular locality, and through resident offices at Air Force bases and contractors' plants where there is sufficient audit work to justify the full time of one or more auditors. Practically all Air Force bases and all major Air Force contractors require resident audit offices.

The Headquarters of the Auditor General has the primary duty of developing audit policies and procedures for the use of all personnel of his staff and the audit staffs of the overseas commands, which must conform to the policies of the Department of Defense. The Auditor General is directly responsible for the administration of the district organizations.

There are two general types of audits; those relating to: (1) costs incurred under procurement contracts, and (2) the internal accounts of the Air Force. Audits relating to procurement are required in connection with: (1) cost reimbursement type contracts, (2) fixed price type contracts with price redetermination provisions, (3) termination of contracts, (4) incentive type contracts, and (5) statutory renegotiation when required. As a rule, audits in connection with statutory renegotiation are required only when contractors' submitted statements are found to be unreliable.

The basic purpose of auditing costs incurred under procurement contracts is to develop information for use of contracting officers in negotiating prices and in considering contractors' claims for reimbursement of costs. In the Air Force, the contracting officer has the responsibility for approval of contract costs. The information furnished by the Auditor General is in the nature of professional accounting advice and is used according to the discretion of the responsible official. As to the audit of cost reimbursement type contracts, it is the auditor's responsibility to make recommendations to the contracting officer as to the reliability of claims for reimbursement submitted by the contractor.

Under this type of contract the auditor must understand thoroughly the applicable cost formula or definition included in the contract. Audits in connection with other types of contracts are made to determine the reliability of contractors' cost statements or records. Reports of such audit examinations are furnished contracting officers or negotiating officers, as appropriate, for use in negotiating prices and settlements. This historical cost information is, of course, only one element considered in such negotiations. An audit of every contract is not required, since many are for such small amounts that the expenditure of audit effort is not justifiable. It is desirable to have audits or accounting surveys available to negotiating officers where the costs involved are substantial.

The internal accounts of the Air Force relate to: (1) property, (2) commissaries,

(3) cash sales, (4) appropriated funds, and (5) nonappropriated activities. The audits of these accounts are made for the use of the local commanders and the Headquarters of the major command concerned. Reports of these audits present an independent view of the status of the accounts in relation to governing regulations. They also include a statement of any specific deficiencies observed, with recommendations for improvements. Thus, through the Auditor General's organization, the local commands receive independent audits similar to those obtainable through independent public accountants. Where irregularities are disclosed, they are ordinarily of a type which can be corrected by the local commander. However, in some cases it may be necessary to report (through the local commander) discrepancies or irregularities to the command Headquarters, or possibly to the Chief of Staff, Headquarters, USAF, for necessary staff action.

It should be apparent, from the description of activities of the Auditor General, that the assigned personnel must have a thorough background of education and experience in accounting and auditing. In the performance of industrial audits, that is, those relating to procurement, the auditors must also know procurement regulations and current auditing techniques. It is necessary that the Auditor General staff compare favorably with public accountants and with the highly qualified personnel employed by contractors. In the performance of the audit of the internal accounts of the Air Force, the auditors must know the governing regulations. The auditors in charge at the many Air Force bases where there are resident audit offices usually carry the rank of captain or above, depending on the workload and types of accounts. Due to the present critical manpower situation, there is a tendency toward assigning military personnel and not only at Air Force bases, but also at contractors' plants.

• A famous general of the U.S. armed services recently said, "When an airplane is sitting on the ground, it's going to waste."

This applies to commercial air transports as well as to military aircraft. And today, when all aircraft are vitally needed to help sustain our fighting forces overseas and our defense drive at home, Douglas is making every effort to keep more airplanes in the air more hours.

Much of this effort consists of manufacturing and delivering spare parts. For, under stepped-up flying hours, aircraft parts need replacement more often. Without them the plane is "going to waste."

Supplying tons of spare parts every month for aircraft in all parts of the world is just one segment of the vast Douglas operation. In addition to the many aircraft models currently coming off the production lines, Douglas engineers and research experts have under development advanced types of aircraft, guided missiles and electronic equipment.

"The most effective contribution we can make to our own security and the preservation of peace is to provide clear-cut, unequivocal proof that we can first, attain, and second, maintain the military strength we need as long as world peace remains insecure."—
SECRETARY OF DEFENSE GEORGE C. MARSHALL.

OUR PRIORITY LIST

- Establishment and operation of a Universal Training and Service program and the building of readiness for industrial production for war as bases for an "enduring system of National Defense."
- Continued scientific research and development, particularly in all new and unconventional devices and methods of warfare.
- Revision of Career Compensation Act to correct injustices demonstrated by experience, including adequate compensation of junior officers with long-term career prospects; permanent legislation for special pay for personnel actually engaged in combat with the enemy. More realistic allowances, including those for travel and per diem. Improved retirement pay for disabled and wounded personnel.
- Early construction of adequate government quarters for Service personnel at all permanent stations, supplemented by government-sponsored private construction to meet expansion needs.
- Continuation and extension of medical and dental care for Service families; provision for education at government expense of children of Service personnel at stations where suitable free public schools are not available; and survivor benefits for dependents.
- Restoration of military exemptions from Federal Income Tax, broadened to exclude all retired pay from taxation. Recall to active duty of militarily useful retired officers, together with liberalization of ban on dual compensation so that the government may utilize fully the services of all capable retired personnel.
- A satisfactory and orderly promotion system for warrant officers to assure all qualified appointees of reaching top grade prior to retirement.
- Adjustment of promotion procedures to meet current emergency needs and to assure retention on active duty of all qualified officers.

Secretary Pace's Year. When Frank Pace, jr., took the oath of office as Secretary of the Army on 12 April 1950 it can not be said that the Service was overly enthusiastic. In his previous position as Director of the Bureau of the Budget during a period of economy, his diligent pursuit of those duties often conflicted with the interests of the forces of National Defense. Happily for the country, however, both Mr. Pace's attitude toward the Army and the Army's regard for him have been modified greatly during the year he has been in office. In fact, there is now a great admiration, one for the other. Although Mr. Pace took over his position at a time when the Army's strength had suffered from an era of penny-pinching, he gave it real leadership and skilled administration through the Korean crisis precipitated only two months after he took over. During his year the Army has doubled in strength. A huge expansion and procurement program has been put underway smoothly and capably. Those who have worked closely with Mr. Pace admire particularly his ability not only to organize but to use an organization efficiently. He is not an independent executive sternly running affairs his own way—he is part of his own organization, guiding it and using it. It is a recognition of this capacity of Mr. Pace's that has led the other secretaries to choose him, even though he is not the senior member in service or years, as their chairman in the Joint Secretaries organization which he played a part in creating and which has quietly accomplished a great deal toward making unification work more smoothly and effectively. Mr. Pace is keenly aware that the success of an organization depends upon the individuals composing it. It is not unusual for him to call an officer informally and tell him that his Secretary is aware of a job well done and appreciates it. The fighting men should know that the project to establish a schedule of combat pay has had his earnest and diligent backing and that the delays which have beset it have not been of his making. Because he is modest and self effacing the country at large is probably not conscious of the part he has played in our defense build-up. But the Service knows and has come to regard him highly for it.

The Under Sea War. In the 51 years since the U. S. Navy acquired its first "submersible torpedo boat," the submarine has grown in importance, terror, and destructive capacity. The original USS Holland, named for the inventor, John Philip Holland, had only one tube, carried three torpedoes, and was slow and short ranged. From that small beginning the submarine grew in war-waging capacity until in both World Wars I and II its use by the Germans seriously hampered and gravely threatened the cause of the United States and her Allies. Today that threat still faces us. In the British Parliament recently the statement was made that Soviet Russia now has a submarine fleet of between 300 and 400, as compared with the 30 ocean going subs the Germans had in 1939, and that through use of German design and German scientists many of the Red submarines are twice as fast as the early World War II models. Yet, while most of the emphasis seems to be on the threat of enemy subs, it must not be forgotten that the undersea vessels have also served us well. The amount of enemy tonnage, both in fighting ships and cargo vessels, our submarines destroyed in the Pacific was prodigious. It is reported that we are now build-

"Incomprehensibles"

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The USAF Major who criticized the actions of the promotion board selecting the latest list of temporary Lt. Cols. is not alone in his "Incomprehension." Shucks, his is only a little "Incomprehensible" after all those I have noted in the past five years or so. Just to list a few of the big ones:

a. Passing up college graduates among the candidates for regular commissions in 1946 for 2-year college men and high school graduates and then sending thousands of them to college for liberal arts degrees.

b. Rejecting candidates for regular commissions in 1946 and then keep right on promoting them like mad. Some who failed of selection have received not less than two promotions since. Many selected have been in grade since 1943 and have not yet been in receipt of promotion.

c. Using Computed Service (that is, age) as a basis for promotion. This is perhaps the most dangerous fallacy we have followed and would be funny (many old and very capable Army officers have seen the humor in it) were it not so loaded with tragedy.

Right Place, Wrong Time

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I would like to recommend that promotion for Regular officers on the basis of temporary rank be reserved for only those few outstanding officers whose value to the Service in higher positions is so great as to merit further disadjustment between their permanent and temporary ranks. I sincerely feel that had it not been for the grace of God, many of those officers now enjoying higher temporary rank would not have been at the right place at the right time to receive such promotions. In my own case, I have served the last five years in positions calling for either a major or lieutenant colonel. Thus, I have been in the right place, but at the wrong time. Had this occurred ing subs which can cruise submerged for long distances because their hydrogen peroxide engines need no air, and that their underwater speed exceeds 25 knots as compared with the much praised snorkel models' speed of 19 knots. At the same time, the Electric Boat Company, successor to Mr. Holland's original Torpedo Boat Company, is engaged in the development of a submarine to utilize atomic power. In anti-submarine warfare, we seem to be well in the forefront, although much of the progress is of necessity secret. We have specially designed and equipped anti-submarine vessels to track down and destroy the enemy under the seas. We also have special anti-submarine submarines. On Submarine Day, next Wednesday, 11 April, it would be fitting for the American people to express satisfaction with the advancements the U. S. Navy has made in both submarine and anti-submarine warfare, to pledge continued support for this important phase of our defense, and to pay honor to our brave men who make it possible.

Churchill's fateful decision to extend the Mediterranean theatre of operations to include a land front in Greece has been followed by a smashing defeat of Mussolini's Fleet.

50 Years Ago

The capture of Aguinaldo and his subsequent act in taking the oath of allegiance to the United States has made considerable change in the plans of the War Department referable to the reorganization of the Army.

85 Years Ago

The bill to create the grade of Brigadier General commandant of the United States Marine Corps was laid on the table, it being held that there was no necessity for creating such an office. During the debate it appeared that several members of the House were in favor of abolishing the corps, on the ground that it was expensive and needless, and that the duties could as well or better be performed by men detailed from the Army.

during the time these other officers received their promotions, I would have been a major or lieutenant colonel for some time now.

All I ask is that I be considered rather than be pushed out by a change in criteria each time I reach the zone of consideration. The plan offered by "Major Arty" sounds like a sensible one to me.

Restrictions on the Retired

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Wish to compliment you on your editorial "Use of Retired Officers" which appeared in your issue of 17 March. Under present regulations, officer personnel retired for physical disability could not receive disability pension, and at same time be employed by the Federal Government in a civilian status, unless that disability was due to combat with an enemy or some explosive instrument.

There are, no doubt, many retired officer personnel whose disability was due to causes other than those above mentioned, and therefore not permitted to accept Government employment without foregoing either their pension or salary—even though their experience (both military and civilian) could be used to great advantage by the Federal Government under present unsettled conditions—unless they forego either their disability pension or salary. In many instances, it takes a combination of both incomes to live, and hence many retired officers would welcome the opportunity to again serve in a civilian status, if the above restrictions were removed.

The ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL was among the first publications to focus attention on the discrepancies existing at the present time—whereby retired Government personnel (U. S. Foreign Service for example) could receive both retired pay and civilian pay while in the employ of the U. S. Government—at the same time denying the privilege to retired officers of the Armed Services.

Harry A. Hirsch

SPEAKER Sam Rayburn, of the U. S. House of Representatives, in a rare speech grimly warned the Congress on 4 Apr. that "we are in greater danger of an expanded war today than we have been at any time since the close of the World War in 1945." The Speaker called attention to the heavy enemy air activity in Korea and "the massing of troops in Manchuria, and not all of them Communist Chinese by a great extent." Continuing he said:

"I think that we stand in the face of terrible danger, and maybe the beginning of World War III."

The Speaker's address came in the course of the House debate on the Universal Military Service and Training Bill, and followed a visit to the President by Mr. Rayburn and other Congressional leaders. Mr. Rayburn declined to elaborate on his statement that troops other than Chinese Communists were massing in Manchuria, but it was taken to indicate that he had information that Russian reinforcements were joining the Reds in Chinese territory relatively close to the battlefield.

The President at his press conference on 5 Apr. failed to throw any additional light on the Rayburn statement, and officials of the State and Defense Departments declined to comment. While there have been no previous indications that Russian ground troops have moved into Manchuria, it has been considered probable that the Soviet government may have sent from 600 to 800 Russian-built planes to Red bases in Manchuria, possibly accompanied by Russian pilots and ground crews. This may have been the basis for Speaker Rayburn's statement.

Representative Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R-Mass.), minority leader, read to the House a letter he had received from General Douglas MacArthur, which Mr. Martin interpreted as meaning that the general would like to have Chinese nationalist troops to assist in the battle for Korea. The general's letter was in reply to one from Mr. Martin. General MacArthur said that a speech of Mr. Martin's urging the utilization of Chinese Nationalists in opening a second front in Asia conflicted neither with logic nor the tradition of meeting force with counter-force.

After a long and confusing debate, the United States Senate this week adopted a resolution approving the sending of four more American divisions to Europe, bringing to six divisions the number available for assignment to General Dwight D. Eisenhower's international army for the defense of Western Europe against Communist aggression. However, despite strong administration opposition, the Senate added a limiting amendment, providing that it was the sense of the Senate that no additional troops should be sent without prior Congressional approval.

This restrictive amendment, which was presented by Senator John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), was fought hard by administration supporters, but was finally adopted by the close vote of 49 to 43, after it had been previously voted down 46 to 44. This limitation is merely the expression of the attitude of the Senate, and has only a moral, not a legal force, in restraining the Presidential authority to deploy troops as the executive may decide. An effort to give the limitation the force of law was subsequently beaten.

Those who opposed placing any limit on the authority of the President to send more troops to Europe as the need arose argued vainly that the Congress could not strip the President of his Constitutional right as Commander-in-Chief to assign troops anywhere they were required in the interest of the security of the United States. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge (R-Mass.) contended that the amendment was so restrictive that the President, if he felt bound by the resolution, could not send supporting corps troops to Europe with the four divisions, without first obtaining Congressional approval. This was denied by Senator Robert A. Taft (R-Ohio), who favored limiting the Presidential authority, but who said the resolution was not subject to such a narrow construction as that suggested by Senator Lodge.

► OTHER RESTRICTIVE AMENDMENTS were voted down. One by Senator Francis Case (R-S.D.) would have banned sending any soldiers under 20 years of age to Europe. Another by Senator Joseph McCarthy (R-Wis.), which called for admission of Spain, Western Germany, Greece and Turkey to the Atlantic Pact, failed by a tie vote, 44 to 44, but later was approved, limited to Spain and West Germany. A proposal by Senator Arthur Watkins (R-Utah) favoring revision of the Italian peace treaty to permit formation of a larger Italian army was accepted with little opposition.

The principal test came on a motion by John W. Bricker (R-Ohio) to recommit the measure to the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees with instructions to report a bill for a statute making the authority of the President to send troops to Europe strictly limited by Congressional action. Passage of such a bill would undoubtedly have occasioned a Presidential veto, with no prospect of enactment over the veto. However, the proposal of Mr. Bricker was defeated by a vote of 56 to 31.

As amended the Senate resolution was adopted 69 to 21, after which a concurrent resolution in almost identical form, but providing for House as well as Senate approval of troops for Europe, was passed by the narrow margin of 45 to 41.

President Vincent Auriol of France concluded his visit to Washington with a stirring address delivered at a joint session of Congress on 2 April. He was given a tremendous ovation by the Senators and Representatives, which visibly moved their distinguished guest, whose state visit to this country undoubtedly strengthened the bonds of friendship between France and the United States, that have been traditional since the foundation of our country. He is the first head of the French nation ever to visit the United States while in office.

In his Congressional address the French President warmly thanked the people of this country for the generous aid extended under the Marshall Plan, which furnished the impetus to the paralyzed industry of France to bring about a striking economic recovery in a remarkably short period. He scoffed at the suggestion that France might adopt an attitude of "neutralism" in the struggle between Communism and liberty. This he characterized not only as "a moral absurdity," but also as "geographical and historical nonsense." He spoke of the losses of France in defense of liberty, and said that he does not hesitate to reaffirm her faith and her will to defend her peace and independence.

► PRESIDENT AURIOL was accompanied, in his visit to the United States, by French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and a staff of diplomats. While the trip was in the nature of a ceremonial call, without specific political significance, there were conferences with President Truman and Secretary of State Dean Acheson, which tended to solidify further the aims and purposes of the United States and France in foreign relations.

On the occasion of the third anniversary of the Economic Co-operation Administration, formed to implement Marshall Plan aid to foreign countries, President Truman this week announced that he would ask the Congress to extend the program on a continuing basis, beyond the terminal date of next year. With economic recovery of Western Europe making satisfactory progress, the emphasis of future Marshall Plan aid will be to help European countries to increase their productive capacity to strengthen their defenses against the threat of militant Communism.

At the long drawn-out meeting of deputy foreign ministers in Paris, now in its fifth week, the United States, Great Britain and France this week submitted a compromise proposal for the agenda of the proposed Big Four conference. Under the new proposal the program for discussion by the foreign ministers would include German demilitarization, the level of armaments of Russia and the three western powers, and the effects of the present international tension. The proposed new agenda would omit any reference to Soviet satellite treaty violations, which the western powers had previously insisted on including.

While the Russian deputy foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko, appeared cool to the western proposal, it was obvious that it had narrowed the area of disagreement and raised some hope that the preliminary meeting might not be a complete failure. However, Mr. Gromyko appeared not to be content without bringing the Atlantic Pact, Allied bases in other countries, and disposition of Trieste into the discussions. This insistence could still wreck the conference.

In Indo-China this week the French claimed a major victory over the Viet Minh Communist rebels. It is announced that in a week-long battle French forces and native allies killed, wounded or captured 4,100 Reds. According to the official communiqué the rebels in greatly superior numbers attacked French outposts north of Haiphong and gained some initial successes, in an effort to cut communications with Hanoi on the Red River delta. The rebels captured two outposts and destroyed the dam which provides the drinking water supply for Haiphong. After three days the French counter-attacked, with strong air support. For another three days the opposing forces were locked in a hand-to-hand struggle, during which two Red regiments were practically destroyed. The rebels then fled, abandoning large quantities of arms.

General Streit Confirmed—Permitting interruption of debate on the assignment of ground forces to Europe by the required unanimous consent, the Senate late on 30 March confirmed the nomination of Maj. Gen. Paul H. Streit, USA, Commanding General, Army Medical Center and Walter Reed Army Hospital, Washington, D. C., to be a permanent two-star officer. The action permits the retention on active duty of one of the Services' outstanding medical officers, since as a permanent brigadier general, General Streit would have had to retire on 1 April. His nomination for the permanent rank of major general did not reach the Senate until 22 March and many members of the Armed Services Committee were out of town for the Easter holiday.

However, these members were reached by telegram and quickly approved the nomination, which consequently was endorsed by the Senate on the last day of official business prior to the 1 April deadline.

General Streit's nomination was acted on individually, although there were three other nominations on the same list, namely that of Brig. Gen. James C. Fry, Headquarters, U. S. Forces in Austria, to be a permanent brigadier general; Col. Archelaus L. Hamblet, Special Assistant to the Secretary of the Army for Occupied Areas, to be a temporary brigadier general; and Col. Anthony J. D. Biddle, Jr., Deputy Chief of Staff for National Affairs, SHAPE, to be a temporary brigadier general.

Manpower and Public Information—Upon her assumption of office as Assistant Secretary of Defense, Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg was given broad memorandum authority by Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall to supervise and coordinate all manpower policies of the Armed Forces. At that time, THE JOURNAL speculated that an explanation possibly would be forthcoming defining more explicitly the relationship of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense in charge of manpower to the Personnel Policy Board of the Department of Defense, which had previously been responsible for coordination of manpower policies. No such statement has been issued as yet, although it is known that this matter has been under study.

It now appears that in addition to the relationship of Mrs. Rosenberg's office to the Personnel Policy Board, clarification may be needed between her responsibilities and those of public information officials of the Armed Forces. For in addition to approving manpower policies of the Services, Mrs. Rosenberg has been supervising the release of public statements regarding these policies. Presumably, the major reason for this has been the necessity for highest-level coordination in connection with the Congressional action on the Universal Military Service and Training legislation.

However, many of the press releases which Mrs. Rosenberg has been checking before release have little to do with the UMST measure. There have been instances during recent weeks where the Services have sent unclassified instructions regarding manpower policies to the field, but have had to hold up public announcement of action pending review and clearance of statements by the Assistant Secretary of Defense. This has led to delay and some confusion, particularly with regard to personnel issues affecting only a single Service.

Presumably, when action on UMST is completed, the Department of Defense will have an opportunity to study and clarify the relationship of the Assistant Secretary's functions to those of the Personnel Policy Board and to the offices of public information.

Unique Marine Aviator—The Marine Corps' first and only warrant officer pilot is now serving with a jet night fighter squadron at the El Toro MCAS, Santa Ana, Calif. He is CWO Joseph A. Corvi, who originally received orders to flight training as a staff sergeant in 1941. But because there was a critical need at that time for electronic specialists, his orders were cancelled "temporarily." It was not until 1946, by which time he had advanced to warrant officer, that Mr. Corvi was sent to flight school at Pensacola, Fla.

Air Officer Retires—At Maxwell AFB, Ala., a full military review was held 29 March honoring Col. Gilbert T. Collar, retiring after 33 years' service. He has served as President of the Physical Evaluation Board at the Air University since June 1950, and came to Maxwell from similar duty at Oliver Army Hospital, Augusta, Ga. Colonel and Mrs. Collar will make their home in Riverside, Calif.

Foreign Military Notes—The progress of the Military Defense Assistance Program is indicated in the 30 March report by the New York Port of Embarkation that the 1,000,000th ton of MDAP material, exclusive of flyaway aircraft and naval vessels, has been shipped abroad. The bulk of this equipment has gone to the Western Europe countries of the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Denmark, Norway and Italy, with a lesser amount going to Greece, Turkey and Iran and the balance sent to the Philippines, Indochina, Malaya, Indonesia, Burma and Formosa. Major items of equipment include more than 1600 tanks and combat vehicles, 750 major pieces of artillery, more than 6000 general purpose vehicles and over 600 aircraft and more than 50 naval vessels and small craft.

► THE TRANSFER of 24 destroyer escorts to friendly nations under mutual defense agreements was approved this week by the House Armed Services Committee, acting upon a request from Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, USN, Chief of Naval Operations. Nine of the DE's will represent new transfers, while the 15 others are held by Allies under wartime lend-lease provisions. Of the nine vessels in the first group, France, Denmark and Uruguay would receive two each and Peru three. Under the lend-lease arrangement, Brazil has eight, Britain one and France six.

► CANADA—Defense Minister Brooke Claxton has announced formation of the 25th Reinforcement Group of the Canadian Army Special Force to be based in the Far East. The Group will provide a reinforcement pool for the Special Force brigade in Korea.

► GREAT BRITAIN—A Royal Australian Air Force Squadron in Tokyo is taking delivery of Gloster Meteor 8 jet fighters for operational use in Korea. Details of this mark of the Meteor show it to have a higher maximum speed, greater rate of climb and range and more powerful armament than previous versions.

Powered by two Rolls-Royce Derwent 8 jet engines it has a square-cut tail unit with more pronounced sweep-back, a lengthened fuselage and single piece cockpit hood. The new hood is electrically operated and the cabin is pressurized. The Meteor 8 has outstanding maneuverability up to a higher limiting Mach number, and it retains these at its service ceiling of 44,000 ft. As an interceptor it can climb to 30,000 ft. in 6½ minutes and has, in maneuvers, made the highest interceptions ever made by RAF fighters over Britain.

Meteor 8's are being delivered to the Air Forces of Holland, Belgium and Denmark, which are already equipped with Mark 4's.

► TURKEY—Lt. Gen. Muzaffer Goksenin, Commanding General, Turkish Air Force, has arrived in the United States for a three-week tour of Air Force installations and facilities. During his stay in this country, General Goksenin will be an official guest of the Air Force. He is accompanied by Brig. Gen. Tekin Ariburun, Chief of Operations, and Lt. Col. Cemal Goker, Aide de Camp to General Goksenin. Lt. Col. Hugh D. Dow of USAF Headquarters, will accompany the party as escort officer.

Veteran Navy MSC Officer Retires—After 33 years' continuous service, Comdr. Claude L. Boles, MSC, USN, was retired 1 April, his last duty assignment having been as Executive Officer, Armed Services Medical Regulating Office in Washington, D. C. Commander and Mrs. Boles will make their home in Pasadena, Calif.

Army Medical Service Specialists—The Army Medical Service currently has 354 officers on duty, who have been certified as specialists in various fields. Of the total, 232 are in the Regular Army Medical Corps, 19 in the Regular Army Dental Corps, and four in the Regular Army Medical Service Corps. The remaining 99 are medical officers belonging to the Reserve and National Guard now on extended active duty with the Army.

"Prussian Staff" Allegation—A vitriolic blast at top military officials was delivered on the floor of the House this week by Representative Thomas H. Werdel (R-Calif.). He charged that "we have come to the awful day in America where we have a supreme general staff, modeled after Hitler and the Prussians, seeking military control over industry, labor, all military establishments, the economy, and the press."

The California Congressman, speaking during opening House debate on the Universal Military Training and Service bill, asserted that "we have the Hitlerian general staff in operation today . . . built slowly and insidiously under our very eyes." He said there was an "iron curtain around the Pentagon," created "through the method of marking confidential and secret certain documents describing their plans which should be public record available to the press and to the public."

Representative Werdel told his colleagues that "turbulent and discontented men of rank in proportion as they are puffed up with personal pride and arrogance or in proportion as they overestimate the responsibilities of their particular rank, generally despise their own order. They, of course, feel justified to make changes in social order in an effort to accomplish the result they believe beneficial."

Continuing his untempered remarks, Representative Werdel maintained that the Department of Defense has argued the need for UMT "fanatically." He said "every type of high-pressure method has been used by top generals before committees." (Note: Representative Werdel is not a member of the Armed Services Committee, which held the hearings on UMT.)

Representative Werdel accused Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall of instilling fright during the recent Easter recess of Congress. Presumably, he referred to the Secretary's recent statement that he believed the danger to the Nation was greater now than it was last November and December when U.N. forces in Korea were suffering serious reverses. "Today," he said, "we are being lashed once again around the vicious circle of compromise, expediency and piecemeal expansion while the brass and the galleries cry 'urgent' and point the finger of scorn."

In concluding his lengthy statement to the House, Representative Werdel said: "No one can deny that America is at cross roads in its history. It is beyond belief that at a time of world crisis we should have in our Military Establishment persons whose hunger for dominion, whose passion for control, and whose greed for power should lead them to seize this moment of national peril to foist upon us that which they could not get at any other time. This Congress would be not only remiss in its duties, but unfaithful to our country, if a full scale investigation of our military policies is any longer deferred."

Army Field Forces—General Mark W. Clark, Chief of Army Field Forces, Ft. Monroe, Va., was in West Point, N. Y., on 3 April to act as an honorary pallbearer at the funeral services for the late Maj. Gen. Bryant E. Moore.

Col. Raymond R. Robins, Post Commander at Erlangen, Germany, until September 1950, has been assigned to Research & Development Section, OCAFF. Prior to his Erlangen assignment, Colonel Robins was Deputy Chief of Staff of the First Infantry Division.

Lt. Col. John G. Berry of Laurel, Miss., has been assigned to the G-3 (Training) Section, National Guard Branch, OCAFF. Prior to being ordered into active military service, Colonel Berry was the owner and operator of a hotel in Laurel. Lt. Col. Rueben H. Tucker also has been assigned to G-3, OCAFF. The Colonel, who has been in the Army for more than 20 years, has served as enlisted man and officer. He has been with airborne units for 10 years and completed the rigorous training of the airborne school at Fort Benning, Ga. He has made over 100 jumps and holds the Master Parachutist rating.

Signal Corps Chief Retires—The Army began this month without a Chief Signal Officer following the retirement on 31 March of Maj. Gen. Spencer B. Akin, who completed a four-year tour in his post. On 5 April, the President nominated Brig. Gen. George I. Back for this office.

Reporting on the progress of the Signal Corps since the end of World War II, General Akin observed that activity has been largely, although not exclusively, related to the emergency of integrated communications through a dual program of technical development of new equipment and long-range research. Basic in this program at the combat level, he said, have been the new walkie-talkie and handie-talkie radios, and a large new series of vehicular sets, known as the AN/GRC-3 through 8 series. With these radios, Infantry, Armor, and Artillery can be closely coordinated as a combat team.

Integrated communications, however, go far beyond the combat zone. The Signal Corps maintains and constantly improves a worldwide communications net, making it possible for Washington to contact any area of operations almost instantly. The scope of this system is suggested by the fact that the Alaska Communication System alone, stretching from Seattle to Point Barrow and through the Aleutians, extends over a greater distance than a line from New York City to San Francisco.

To keep this huge system functioning, the Signal Corps has maintained research and development contacts with the laboratories of industrial and educational institutions, in addition to its own research efforts in the Signal Corps Engineering Laboratories.

Planning, General Akin noted, also is an important responsibility of the Signal Corps and includes industrial mobilization. The Corps is a major supply agency which has had to meet fluctuating and recently accelerating demands. Thus in fiscal year 1947, Signal Corps procurement amounted to $38,560,000, while for fiscal year 1951 it is expected to reach $2.3 billions.

The Signal Corps has worked with other services toward standardizing communications equipment and procedures and has represented the Army in international communications discussions. It also makes all of the Army's training films and many used by other services. In addition, its still and motion pictures have been valuable for high-level military analysis, historical record, and public information. The Signal Corps is responsible for about 37 per cent of the entire Army literature program.

General Akin became Chief Signal Officer of the Army on 1 April 1947, after serving continuously in the Army since he was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry in 1910. A graduate of Virginia Military Institute, he saw service in the Philippines early in his career. During World War II he was General Douglas MacArthur's Chief Signal Officer, from the early, dark days in the Philippines to the occupation of Japan.

He was also wartime Chief of the Allied Signal Intelligence Service and Chief of the Allied Radar and Radio Countermeasures Service. Following the occupation of the Japanese Islands, he was Chief Signal Officer, General Headquarters, United States Army Forces, Pacific; and Chief of the Civil and Postal Communications Section on the Staff of the Supreme Commander, Allied Powers in the Pacific (SCAP), until he became Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

Army Dental Corps—Brig. Gen. Oscar P. Snyder announces that the Seventh Class in Dental Service Operation and Administration will begin at the Army Medical Center on 14 May. While this course of instruction was planned primarily for dental officers of civilian components, the requisites have been changed so that dental officers on active duty may attend. A full quota of 50 officers is expected.

Mayor Now a Sergeant—The mayor of Whitney, Tex., is now on duty with the 4014th OM Squadron at Carswell AFB, Tex. He is S/Sgt. Fred T. Basham, sr., who left his post to reenter the Air Force, in which he served during World War II.

In 1949, Sergeant (then Mayor) Basham gained nationwide recognition when housewives in his city complained about the old men who spent their days sunning themselves on the main street corner. When the mayor attempted to make the men quit their stronghold, there was serious protest. The matter was not resolved until a vote was taken. The men, women, and the city helped erect more comfortable benches for them.

"Operation Take Ten"—Sizzling steaks on china plates served by a waiter are but a single feature of a Rest and Recuperation activity, set up by the 17th Regiment of the 7th Infantry Division within earshot of the frontlines in Korea. During "Operation Take Ten," combat weary men of the Regiment are given a three day respite during which there is an opportunity for showers, change of clothes, haircuts, books, music, and no bed checks, lights out or orders.

New Funds Asked for National Defense—The President late this week asked Congress for $6.4 billions additional for National Defense. The Department of Defense prepared the following summary of 1951 third supplemental appropriation estimate showing approximate distribution by purpose:

| | Army | Navy (in millions) | Air Force | Total |
|---|-------|-----------------------|--------------|-------|
| 1. For increase in military strength over 1951 Second Supplemental | 1,242 | 232 | 125 | 1,599 |

In the midst of a social program of entertainment for the President of France and his wife, Mrs. Truman took time out to visit the fair held by the Air Force Officers' Wives Club at Bolling Field last Saturday, 31 March. Accompanied by Brig. Gen. Robert B. Landry, the President's Air Force aide, she looked very smart in a black gown and mink cape, a small black hat trimmed with two mammoth roses—one white, one pale shell pink, and very becoming. The orchids pinned to her cape were the gift of the officers of the Club, headed by Mrs. Vandenberg, wife of the Air Force Chief of Staff and honorary president of the club.

Mrs. Aubrey Moore, wife of Brig. Gen. Moore, also presented Mrs. Truman with a carton of Air Force matches, fashioned of silver foil and embossed with the USAF insignia. She also explained to the First Lady the projects of the Officers' Wives Club.

That the fair was a huge success is attested by the fact that the gross proceeds of the day were about $13,245.

Escorting Madame Auriol, wife of the French President to Walter Reed to visit wounded GIs, Mme. Bonnet, the French Ambassador's wife, did not forget the Airmen and their wives' fair, but donated some valuable costume jewelry—cultured pearls, etc., and perfumes to the booth in charge of Mrs. Finletter, the wife of the Secretary of the Air Force.

Many members of the club work in union with their officer husbands in the hobbies such as photography, painting, leather tooling and sketching, etc., and some booths exhibited the handiwork of both officer and wife.

The Fair is a fund-raising project to augment the Club's Personal Service Fund, which supports a large aid program under the Personal Service Committee. This committee works with the chaplains, assists the Red Cross, the Air Force Aid Society and other aid organizations. The Personal Service Committee gives emergency aid and assistance to both enlisted and officer personnel, wherever a need arises in the way of personal service or financial assistance, or both. Also deriving funds from the Fair's in-take is the Club's Hospital Liaison Committee, as well as the Club's Volunteer Service to military patients in military hospitals, which adds immeasurably to the comfort of hospitalized veterans. Last year, the Fair donated $2,000.00 to the Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen's Club.

It was estimated that 10,000 people attended, representing the public as well as the Services. Among the visitors were Mrs. Carl Spaatz and Mrs. Stuart Symington, who arrived together; the Secretary of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter, whose wife was chairman of the second-hand tie booth; the Under Secretary of the Air Force and Mrs. John A. McCone; and the Chief of Staff of the Air Force General Hoyt S. Vandenberg and General Nathan Twining.

The food booth did almost $1,000.00 worth of business, under the supervision of Mrs. Marshall Roth, where, in addition to contributions from members of the Club, were those of two admirals' wives and many exotic foods given by the foreign air attaches. The Brazilian Air Attaché, Brig. Gen. Netto de Reys, had his own booth, where he served mate, the Brazilian tea, with assorted delicacies from his country, while his daughter played the guitar. An interesting note is that many of the foreign air attaches participated in the success of the Fair in other ways. They had a section of Special Exhibits, where in glass museum cases were displayed objets d'art from many countries such as Pakistan, Israel, Yugoslavia, India and Denmark. This exhibit was under the guidance of Mrs. Charles M. Turner. The Swedish Air Attaché contributed dolls from his country, which were sold, and all told, some thirty nations participated in one way or another. One of the outstanding Air Force exhibits was put on by Mrs. Mitchell Gible, who showed her collection of North Korean art treasures collected during her residence in Korea from 1946 to 1948.

Dual highlights of this month's meeting of the Air Force Officers' Wives Club of Washington next Wednesday, 11 April, will be the presentation of candidates for office during the 1951-52 club year and the exciting report on the fair. Luncheon will be served at 12:30 P.M.

Mrs. Nathan Twining, honorary vice president of the club and chairman of the nominating committee will present candidates for office during the coming club year.

Of special interest will be the story of "service to others" which their efforts have made possible and the recognition by Mrs. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, honorary president of the club and wife of the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, of members deeply engrossed in the club's service program.

Guests of Mrs. Vandenberg will include Mrs. Thomas K. Finletter, Mrs. John A. McCone and Mrs. Harold Stuart. Also seated at Mrs. Vandenberg's table will be Mrs. Twining, Mrs. W. E. Todd, Mrs. Edward Kendricks, Mrs. Harry E. Berresford, Jr., Mrs. Harold C. Donnelly, Mrs. Paul I. Doty, Mrs. Guy L. Hudson, Jr., and

In keeping with the goodwill gestures manifested by the Conference of Latin American diplomats being held in Washington is the innovation in the festival of Cherry Blossom time by an invitation to some twenty South and Central American beauties to act as ladies in waiting to the Queen. Escorts for these specially invited young guests were called for and a goodly array of young officers are doing their bit in this pleasant "duty."

The Jangos will hold their annual business meeting for the election of officers and the reading of the annual report at a luncheon on 17 April at the Army and Navy Country Club in Arlington. Incoming members of the Board of Directors will be welcomed. The four new members nominated to serve two year terms are Mrs. Paul Doty, wife of Colonel Doty, USAF, who will replace Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton who has served on the board during the past two years; Mrs. Stanley Scott, wife of Major General Scott, USA, will replace Mrs. Paul H. Streit. Mrs. Streit has served as Guild Chairman of the Canteen for the Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, and Airmen's Club for the past two years.

Mrs. F. W. McMahon, wife of Rear Admiral McMahon, USN, will replace Mrs. J. W. Roper; Mrs. J. A. Hirshfield, wife of Captain Hirshfield, USCG, will replace Mrs. Edward H. Thiele who has served as Chairman of the By-Laws Committee during her term.

The retiring Board of Directors voted to make Jangos donations, this year, to the organizations of the District of Columbia which help children. This was in tribute to the fine work of the Junior Jangos at Doctors' Hospital, the Soldiers', Sailors', Marines' and Airmen's Club Canteen where the girls serve meals on Saturdays and Sundays, and the National Symphony Committee which keeps the orchestra's scrap book up to date. Mrs. Lewis A. Pick is chairman of the Plans and Policy Committee which suggested the following donations: $500 to the Canteen of the S.S.M.A. Club; $500 for the summer camp program of the Salvation Army; $450 to the Federated Council of Church Women who work with the children of Gallinger Hospital and the Juvenile Court Ward, and $150 to the House of Mercy.

During the year, Mrs. Francis P. Matthews, wife of the Secretary of the Navy; Mrs. Thomas Finletter, wife of the Secretary of Air; and Mrs. Archibald Alexander, wife of the assistant Secretary of the Army, were elected to fill vacancies on the Board. They are remaining on the Board for the regular two year term which began 1 April. There are fourteen members of the Jango Board of Directors whose duty it is to manage the Jango organization. Other members now serving are: Mrs. Charles A. Bolte for the Army, Mrs. John T. Koehler for the Navy, Mrs. Robert B. Luckey for the Marines, Mrs. Anthony C. McAuliffe for the Army, Mrs. Joseph A. Morris for the Air Force, Mrs. Lewis A. Pick for the Army and Mrs. Harold Stuart for the Air Force.

Col. Sidney F. Electric Boat and Atom-Sub

Basic designs for an atomic-powered submarine are now being developed by the Groton, Conn., plant of the Electric Boat Company. John Jay Hopkins, company president, declares in the stockholders' annual report released this week.

Mr. Hopkins said that the company's participation last year in development of a nuclear-powered submarine was the outstanding event of the company's 1950 record. He noted that as of 31 Dec. 1950, unfilled orders amounted to $91,260,000, approximately double that at the end of 1949.

Included in the backlog are orders for four U. S. Navy submarines contracted for in previous years and orders for conversion of three submarines to high-speed snorkel type. Additionally, the company has orders from the Canadian government for F-86 Sabre jet fighter planes.

Amphibious Vehicle Contract

Award of a production contract for the "Otter," the Army's new and versatile amphibious vehicle, to the Pontiac Motor Division of the General Motors Corporation was announced by the Army on 5 April.

The Otter which was developed by the Army Ordnance Corps, can plow through mud, go through water and travel speedily over land. It will be produced at Pontiac, Mich. The new vehicle carries a crew of two, a number of fully-equipped fighting men and has a speed on land of 36 miles per hour.

There was no indication given by the Army as to the number of vehicles ordered.

The Army described the Otter as a more modern, bigger and better version of the wartime "Weasel," which was noted for its ability to traverse roads, swamps, bogs, and water. The new vehicle has considerably greater capacity, greater speed, and a greater payload. It can deliver a substantial number of fully equipped soldiers where they are wanted, regardless of terrain difficulties. Snow and tundra, for example, are no obstacle to its operation.

In addition, the Otter is characterized by ease of control, simplified maintenance, and extreme agility. Steered as easily as a modern automobile, its operation requires no special training, and can turn "on a dime" despite the fact that it is a track-laying vehicle, the Army said.

B-47 Electronics Men Needed

A call for more than 400 electronics technicians and inspectors for the accelerated B-47 Stratojet bomber program at Wichita, Kans., was issued over the weekend by Boeing Airplane Company's Wichita Division. A company statement said this is the largest single requirement for electronics specialists in Boeing history.

U. S. Shipping Loses Ground

The United States is losing ground in the international race aimed at restoration of the world's merchant passenger vessel fleet to its pre-World War II size, according to the National Federation of American Shipping.

In a study of world merchant passenger vessel construction, the Federation noted that while the Stars and Stripes flew over 8% of the world's passenger fleet prior to World War II, today it flies over only 5%. The Federation also pointed out that while foreign nations are building or have under contract 97 passenger-carrying vessels of close to 1,000,000 gross tons, the United States is building only two passenger ships totaling 71,719 gross tons.

The Federation study showed that at the beginning of 1951 the world's merchant passenger vessel fleet was 75% by number and 70% by gross tonnage of its pre-World War II level of 1,500 ships of 12 million gross tons.

That other nations are doing a far better job than the United States in rebuilding their passenger fleets is evidenced by the fact that upon completion of present construction, the United Kingdom will have about 92% of her prewar passenger tonnage; the Netherlands will have about 78%, and France 76%. Among the smaller maritime nations, Argentina will have increased her passenger fleet ten times over her prewar level.

The Federation study showed that the United States after completion of ships under construction, will have only 62% of her prewar tonnage, or slightly more relatively than Italy, which will soon have over 54% of her prewar passenger fleet.

Order More "Scorpions"

For the second time in less than three months, the Air Force has increased its orders for production of Northrop Scorpion F-89 all-weather interceptors, Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Echols, USAF-Ret, general manager and chairman of the Northrop Aircraft board, has announced.

The production boost was authorized in a new letter of intent covering a substantial additional quantity of the fast, heavily-armed interceptors. Exact number of F-89s now scheduled for production was not disclosed, but the order raises Northrop's backlog to an all-time high of approximately $300,000,000.

The new order follows a recent statement by Secretary of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter that the F-89 would be ordered into heavy production.

Industrial College Alumni

Maj. Gen. A. C. McAuliffe, USA, Chief Chemical Officer, was the principal speaker at the 27 March luncheon meeting of the Alumni Association of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces at Fort Lesley J. McNair, Washington, D. C.

General McAuliffe spoke on "The Role Of The Industrial College Of The Armed Forces In Relation To The Chemical Corps." He outlined the increasing necessity for close and interested relationship between the military and civilian organizations, and the part civilian agencies play in the accomplishment of the Chemical Corps mission.

General McAuliffe stated that: "Since the birth of our nation some 175 years ago, the civilian has become increasingly important in military affairs. No longer can the military be considered a world within itself; it must rely more and more upon the cooperative assistance of the civilian. This mutual reliance is not easily achieved; it takes education on both sides over a long period of time. An understanding must be built up among the members of the Armed Services, and the nation-at-large, of the complex and ever changing problems of mobilization and administration of the national economy for war."

"This is the spot where the graduates of the Industrial College stand prepared to cope with the situation."

Maj. Gen. Herman Feldman, USA Quartermaster General, and President of the Alumni Association, presided. Approximately 100 members attended.

Copies of the Control Manual and of the new Government Property Section of the ASPR may be obtained in the near future from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, 45 G Street, NW, Washington 25.

The Section is mandatory not later than 1 May.

Present 4 CMH Awards

General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, on 3 April, acting on behalf of President Truman, presented the Congressional Medal of Honor to members of families of four Army enlisted men who died in performing acts of valor in Korea.

The posthumous decorations, the Nation's highest, were made to:

Sgt. William R. Jecelin, Company C, 35th Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division.

Pfc Joseph R. Ouellette, Company H, 9th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Division.

Cpl. Mitchell Red Cloud, Jr., Company E, 19th Infantry Regiment, 24th Infantry Division.

Cpl. Gordon M. Craig, 16th Reconnaissance Company, 1st Cavalry Division.

In presenting the medals, General Bradley made the following statement:

"It is my honor and privilege to represent the President of the United States, our Commander in Chief, this afternoon as we pay solemn, respectful tribute to four valiant fighting Americans who have earned the nation's highest award, The Medal of Honor. "I am especially proud that these men who distinguished themselves on the field of battle were from the enlisted ranks of the Army.

"The spirit of sacrifice is a part of any efficient, effective soldier. Every soldier, every sailor and every airman recognizes this and stands ready to dedicate his life—if need be—to his country and its principles.

"Those whom we honor today had the spirit of fearless patriots—the spirit which impels Americans to scale the heights of courage and strength when their country's liberty and independence are threatened.

"But their sacrifices were made not only for America and Americans. They gave their lives for all free people who have united to resist aggression.

"The war in Korea is a hard war, a war that is part of a coldly calculated plan to destroy freedom and the free way of life; an evil scheme aimed against nations whose sole desire is to maintain peace, and individual freedom.

"Communism, however, will not be imposed upon the world as long as we are strong and as long as there are produced men with the character and fortitude of Sergeant Jecelin, Corporal Red Cloud, Corporal Craig and Private Ouellette.

"They died on a grim battleground where great suffering has been endured, and many losses sustained in the struggle against Communism. Their names will be recorded in the chronicle of outstanding valor that has been written by other gallant Americans whose acts have helped preserve our way of life and the ideals in which we believe.

"The Medal of Honor is conferred only for heroism 'above and beyond the call of duty' to perpetuate in memory, outstanding deeds of courage and selflessness performed in combat. In recognition of their bravery and supreme sacrifices, these four soldiers have been awarded the Medal of Honor. It is the highest award our country can give to express its esteem.

"To the families of these men I offer the deep sympathy and profound gratitude of our nation, and all members of its armed forces. May I add my own humble appreciation to you, 'and to your sons,' for what they have done for our country."

Combat Pay Hearing

create evidence of our recognition."

Secretary Pace appeared before the Committee to give his approval of the legislation, calling attention to the danger and discomforts that have to be endured, and affirming that failure to enact such legislation would be inequitable in the light of the fact that other hazardous duties, such as are carried out by paratroopers and submariners, gain extra pay for personnel.

That the legislation is intended "for ground troops subjected to day in and day out hazards" was stressed by General Collins. This would rule out troops in the rear areas and troops being used occasionally for supply work.

General Collins estimated that sixty per cent of the Korean troops would qualify for the combat pay; that 164,000 army men are in Korea, and that 90,000 of them are exposed to combat hazards daily. Of the expected cost of $72,000,000 annually for all the services, 57.6 per cent would accrue to the Army.

Replying to a question from Senator Flanders (R-Vt.), Secretary Pace and General Collins stressed that "a serious morale problem is involved"—that the appreciation of the nation reflected by the additional pay would mean much to the men, but that "the troops would continue the fight even if the combat pay is not voted."

Maj. Gen. John H. Church, now Commandant of the Infantry Center at Fort Benning, and until February in command of the 24th Division in Korea, added the weight of his opinion favoring the bill.

The Army is to continue its testimony at a session to be announced, and the Navy and Air Force are to add their testimony before the hearings end.

As an amendment to the proposed bill, Senator Sparkman (D-Ala.) suggested the following:

"That any member of the uniformed services whose name is placed upon the temporary disability retired list pursuant to subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section, or who is retired pursuant to the provisions of this title, and whose disability is found to have been incurred as a result of combat with an enemy or the performance of extra-hazardous service or training duty as determined by the Secretary concerned, shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay in an amount equal to 75 per centum of the monthly basic pay which such member would be entitled to receive if serving on active duty in the highest rank, grade, or rating upon which his disability retirement pay is authorized by this subsection to be computed."

"(b) This section shall be effective as of October 1, 1949."

General Collins' Statement

Following is the text of General Collins' statement:

"There is a time-honored principle of our democracy that those who in their work brave extra hazards shall receive extra compensation."

"This principle has in the past been carried over into the military field by the Congress when it enacted legislation to provide the present scales of pay for servicemen. Consequently, Army parachutists, Navy submariners, Air Force, Navy and Marine flying personnel, and others, are currently receiving extra compensation for those periods of their service during which they incur extra hazards."

"The proposal of the Department of Defense that you are considering today would merely extend this principle—according to already established rates for hazardous duty—to the American fighting men who are today incurring very real hazards in Korea. It would not, therefore, inject into our pay system a new principle, but would simply remove an inequity that has existed in that pay system and which has been made more poignant by the fact that others in our Armed Forces are today receiving extra pay for duties which surely are no more hazardous than those of the front-line fighting man."

"Although this proposed legislation makes no distinction as to Service or branch among the Armed Forces who may be eligible for its special provisions, and certainly there are marines, sailors, and airmen, as well as soldiers, incurring hazards in Korea, still the great majority of Americans actually in the front-lines in Korea are soldiers of the Army. Because of this fact, and because I, as Chief of Staff of the Army, am more familiar with their particular problems, I would like to discuss the question of combat pay as it would affect the Army."

"It is my earnest opinion that the case for extending hazardous duty pay to the combat soldier in Korea is logical and compelling. For not only would it remove an inequity that has existed in our pay system for the servicemen in Korea, but it would also have a very salutary effect upon the morale—and consequently upon the combat effectiveness—of the fighting men in Korea."

"The provision of combat duty pay for the front-line soldier would afford him some measure of recognition for his vital role in the defense of our Nation. Such recognition has been long overdue."

"It seems that we must learn and relearn with every war that the ultimate decision in war—and the greatest amount of risks—rests upon the foot soldier, who must meet the enemy face to face on the ground and contest him for that ground."

"I cannot emphasize too strongly the need for recognition of the role of the ground soldier. His is an extremely hazardous business. In World War II, the Army sustained almost 75 per cent of the total battle casualties of the U. S. Armed Forces, and in Korea, the Army is bearing 83 per cent of the total U. S. casualties. Added to this is the fact that our front-line combat soldiers in Korea have been living and fighting under almost incredibly severe conditions of weather, filth, and emotional strain. In addition to the highest casualty rate, they must endure sleeping out-of-doors in mud, in cold, often without warm food, dry clothing, or bathing facilities."

Would Recognize Sacrifice

"There is no measure that could adequately compensate in terms of money for the hardships that our ground soldiers are enduring in Korea, and that is why I place such high value upon the importance of the recognition that special pay would give these brave men. And although I do not wish to minimize the importance of the pay that they would receive, I believe that the recognition of their sacrifice which your action would evidence would be more important than the pay itself to them and to their loved ones."

"It would be fundamental in the establishment of combat pay for combat personnel that it should go to those who actually incur that hazard. As far as the Army is concerned, only approximately 60 per cent of its personnel in Korea would receive this pay; the bulk of it would go to front-line units which are composed of infantry and the supporting elements such as artillery, engineer, medical and others. I believe this is as it should be, and assure the members of the Committee that in the Army this principle would be strictly adhered to."

"During the various trips I have made to Korea, I have talked to our soldiers there of all grades. One of their greatest preoccupations is the thought that the people back home do not realize and do not care what they are undergoing. The passage of this bill would show them that we do know that they are making sacrifices, that we do care, and do want to give concrete evidence of our recognition."

"I am very proud of what the American soldier has done, and is doing, in Korea. They have done a marvelous job under the most adverse conditions imaginable."

"I believe that hazardous duty pay for the combat man in Korea should be provided simply in terms of equity, in terms of consonance with established civilian and military practice, and to give due recognition to the men who in every war that this nation has fought have borne the greatest burden of hazard—the ground combat soldier."

"I therefore recommend your urgent and favorable consideration of the Department of Defense proposal to provide additional compensation for members of the Army, Navy, Marines and Air Force during periods of actual combat duty in Korea."

aviation history bomb-laden Panther Jets were launched from the USS Princeton. These fast fighters struck at bridges in Northeast Korea. Other Panther Jets, Skyraiders and Corsairs attacked enemy installations from Songjin south to the battle line near Chunchon.

In close air support flights Communist troops were napalmed on ridges in the central sector. Navy pilots bombed trenches and gun emplacements in the same area. An enemy command post was strafed and destroyed.

Marine Corsairs from the U. S. Light Carrier Bataan struck military targets from Pyongyang south to the front lines. The Marine pilots destroyed enemy artillery, locomotives, fuel dumps, warehouses and trucks. Other Marine planes rained napalm, explosives and rockets on Communist troops on the battlefield northeast of Seoul.

In a series of spectacular air battles U. S. Air Force jet fighters destroyed at least five enemy MIG-15s in northwest Korea and damaged nine others. On 3 April three Communist MIG-15s swept back-wing jet aircraft were destroyed and five others were damaged in approximately 14 encounters in the sky south of Sinuiju on the Manchurian border. There were no losses of American aircraft. On the following day one MIG-15 was shot down and two others were damaged, while one American plane was slightly damaged.

In last Tuesday's air battle 35 American jets defeated between 50 and 60 enemy planes. Several encounters took place at various points between enemy aircraft and American F-80 Shooting Stars. When the F-80s ran short of fuel the F-86 Sabre Jets took over and shot down three enemy planes. Two were seen to crash and the third was seen burning in a high-speed dive, and immediately afterward fire was observed burning on the ground beneath the scene of the fight. Three enemy planes were damaged by Sabre Jets and two by Shooting Stars.

In the next day's combat 12 F-86 Sabre Jets fought 8 enemy MIGs, destroying one and damaging two. One of our planes was hit, but returned safely to its base.

On Thursday, 5 April, eight F-86s and four F-80s encountered ten or twelve enemy fighters and in the sharp battle that ensued one Red plane was destroyed and two others were damaged, with no damage to American aircraft.

Favorable weather during most of the week enabled Allied planes to take a heavy toll of enemy troops, installations, transportation facilities, and truck convoys. Thousands of enemy vehicles were observed and taken under air attack, with hundreds destroyed or damaged.

Allied fighters and fighter-bombers patrolled the roads from Pyongyang to the buildup area on the central front, attacking convoys, bridges and tunnels. Other aircraft provided close air support for Allied ground patrols in the western and central sectors.

Okinawa-based B-29 medium bombers attacked supply installations at Pyongyang and Hamhung. On some of the bomb runs heavy overcast prevented visual bombing and radar was utilized.
